Milk Inquiry Accepts Denials on Dictographs

Record Closed After Police and Writers Testify, but Romney Scouts Testimony

A House sub-committee took testimony until 10 o'clock last night and then closed its investigation of Washington's milk industry, satisfied—officially at least—that at no time in the inquiry did a dictograph record the affairs, public or private, of a Member of Congress anywhere on Capitol Hill.

From three Metropolitan policemen, at least two of whom would qualify as experts, members of the Bates milk sub-committee heard repeated assertions that their recording devices at no time had been tuned to Congressional doings on Capitol Hill.

From three newspapermen they heard that information about a dictograph supposed to have been installed on the fifth floor of the Old House Office Building was received from a reliable source but that they had no first-hand evidence.

Romney Scouts Denial

At least one person connected with the dictograph inquiry, which probably has stirred members of the House more than any issue of the session, refused to believe his ears, however. He was Kenneth Romney, House sergeant at arms, who told the committee from the witness stand that he "certainly would suspect dictographs were installed."

Though one committeeman, too, indicated grave doubt, the committee closed its record with a preponderance of testimony that the Federal Capitol buildings had not been violated by wire tappers or dictograph snoopers.

Seriousness with which last night's inquiry was viewed—a proceeding with few precedents on Capitol Hill—was revealed by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, when he urged a witness to weigh carefully his testimony with the remark:

"If you knew the heat that is on and the temper of that House today, you would."

Bankhead's Hand Seen

Decision to summon the police witnesses and the newspaper reporters was believed to have been inspired by Speaker Bankhead, to whom Romney yesterday noon submitted a report on an investigation of the use of dictographs in the Capitol, ordered by Bankhead. Romney reported he had been unable to find evidence of dictograph installation.

District Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal issued informal oral summonses to witnesses at the committee's request. Reporters asked to appear were James E. Chinn, Washington Star; James D. Secrest, The Post; Thomas Stevens, Times-Herald, and Martha Strayer, News. All but Miss Strayer were on hand when the hearing got under way at 7:45 p. m.

Police witnesses were Capt. Floyd Truscott, investigator for the Metropolitan Police Department; Precinct Detective Richard Felber and Private Alton Bradford, the department's dictograph expert.

Writers Protect Source

Each of the newspapermen testified he had obtained the story of dictographs in the House Office Building in confidence and refused to reveal his source. All said they never would have written their stories if they hadn't had every reason to believe their source to be reliable.

Asked if he still believed dictographs had been installed at the Capitol, Chinn told the committee:

"I have heard so many conflicting stories on this that I don't know now whether to believe them or not."

Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, who conducted questioning of witnesses, asked Chinn if from a reading of the transcript of the recordings he would be able to tell where the dictographs had been installed.

Chinn replied he never had told anyone he had read the transcript, in the first place, and that if he

G-Men Reveal Plot To Kidnap Heiress

Chicago, June 12 (INS).—A purported plot to kidnap 14-year-old Susan Stern, daughter of a wealthy Chicago investment banker, for $75,000, was revealed tonight by Government agents.

The G-men and police have had the girl under close guard in her Gold Coast home since the plot was thwarted by the premature disclosure of a ransom note several days ago.

Roosevelt Asks Stronger Armed Forces

Tells West Point Class To Adapt Selves to Directing U. S. in War

(Roosevelt Text, Page 9.)

By Elizabeth Henney
A Staff Correspondent.

West Point, N. Y., June 12.—America's desire for peace "must never be mistaken for weakness," President Roosevelt told the 456 graduates of the United States Military Academy class of 1939 today.

"During recent months," the President said, "international considerations have required still greater emphasis upon the vitalization of our defense. For we have had dramatic illustrations of the fate of undefended nations."

He warned that while we still desire peace "by honorable and pacific conduct of our international relations," the Nation's armed forces should be further strengthened.

It was the largest class in the history of the institution to march before the President and receive diplomas. It was the only class, except that of 1924 (with 406) to include more than 400 graduates.

President Arrives at 11:40

A clear and sunny morning, the air was kept to comfortable coolness by a fresh breeze from the Hudson River. As early as 9:30 a. m. the audience of more than 8,000 began to fill the armory, completed this year. Built for indoor drill and athletic events, including football games, the new armory was used for the first time for graduation ceremonies. Of red brick and large enough to house a Zeppelin, the armory has a steel arched roof profusely punctuated with skylights and an earthen floor sparsely covered with grass.

At the back of the speakers' stand was a wide ramp and when the

Pepco Lineman Killed; Moving To New Home

Sudden death, riding a high voltage wire, yesterday canceled the plans of a happy suburban family to move into a larger home so that the baby scheduled to arrive in August would have more room for play.

Edward Albert Allen, 23-year-old lineman with the Potomac Electric Power Co., was killed when his right arm came in contact with a wire carrying 4,000 volts as he worked atop a pole in the 200 block of Kennedy street northwest.

Even as he was being pronounced dead, after three doctors and a rescue squad had worked over him for two hours, Mrs. Allen was downtown buying furniture for the home into which they planned to move.

At the risk of his own life, Victor Fewell, a fellow lineman, pulled Allen's body from the wire and with the aid of A. E. Pence, another worker, brought it to the ground.

Mrs. Allen revealed that she had begged her husband not to go to work yesterday because he was not feeling well.

Royal Britons Wire Gratitude To U. S. Hosts

Message Is Sent To Roosevelt; Hailed Anew in Canada

Aboard Presidential Special en Route to Washington, June 12 (INS). In a message to President Roosevelt, King George today telegraphed his and Queen Elizabeth's deep appreciation of the cordial reception accorded them in the United States.

When the Presidential Special paused at Philadelphia late this afternoon, en route back to Washington, the following message, signed "George R. I.," was put aboard:

"The Queen and I are deeply grateful, Mr. President, to Mrs. Roosevelt and yourself, for your hospitality during the last four days.

"The kindness shown to us personally by you both was indorsed by your fellow countrymen and countrywomen with a cordiality that has stirred our hearts.

"In Washington, in New York and, indeed, wherever we have been in the United States, we have been accorded a reception of which the friendliness was unmistakable.

"Though this was our first visit to your great country and though it was necessarily only a brief one, it has given us memories of kindly feeling and good will that we shall always treasure.

"To you, our host, and to the many thousands of American citizens who also showed us such true hospitality and such spontaneous courtesy, we send our heartfelt thanks and our best wishes."

Quebec Welcome King

By the Associated Press.

Riviere du Loup, Quebec, June 13.—Canadians in the "eastern townships" of Quebec Province and along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River today cheered King George and Queen Elizabeth upon their return to the Dominion after the tumultuous acclaim given the royal couple in the United States.

Cyclonic storms with rain and hail last night had ripped to shreds the decorations at many stops but people were on hand at stations from the international border to the string of towns along the bluffs of the St. Lawrence. The storm hit the royal train during the night, but the King and Queen slept undisturbed through the Hudson Valley and the Adirondacks.

All of the 1,099 miles the visitors traveled by train in the United States were covered at night, and they awoke this morning under the British flag. For the next three days the royal train will arch around the international border into the maritime provinces before the final leave-taking at Halifax on Thursday.

Showers Today, But It'll Still Be Hot

Hope for a slight respite from the heat spell was offered yesterday by the weatherman, who forecast showers for today and tomorrow, following a day of increasing cloudiness.

The respite, if any, however, will be brief, since the forecaster also predicted that there'll be little change in the temperature, which reached a high of 87 yesterday.

Hull Sights Trade Doom In Axis Policy

Departure From Reciprocal Pacts Undermines Social Stability, He Says

Secretary of State Hull last night warned nations of the world that "discriminatory" trade agreements, such as those undertaken by Germany and Italy, are "bound" to result in "a general collapse."

Marking the fifth anniversary of enactment of this country's reciprocal trade agreements law, the Secretary, father of the program, declared in a formal statement that "every departure from the policy represented by this program has led to the stifling of healthy trade and commerce and to the undermining of social stability."

Since the signing of the act, he continued, a number of nations "have sought to cope with their economic problems through regimentation of all economic activity."

"There are findings at length that their people are ill-fed; that their ancient liberties are gone."

Advantages Canceled

"Excessive and arbitrary checks on economic activity—which is nothing more nor less than the usual and normal work of men—cannot be overcome by unpayable loans, nor compensated by the spurious activity of creating sterile armament, nor remedied by oppressive preferences forced upon other nations who must pay unwilling tribute under threats of force," he said.

"The end of that process is destruction."

It is no accident, the Secretary emphasized, "that attempts to create a closed economy anywhere have been preceded or accompanied by an increase in armament and by continuing increase in regimentation."

He declared that "the temporary advantages of trade restriction are canceled at once by the need of turning the national production into military channels, while the people are forced to deny themselves food and necessaries."

Prosperity Is Possible

Even the United States is not exempt from the consequences, he said, "since when other nations arm, the United States is compelled to provide weapons for defense and security."

He cautioned small nations against entering into such "discriminatory" trade arrangements with a larger power lest they "become increasingly dependent upon the larger nation for economic existence and inevitably become political vassals of the larger nation."

Likewise he declared that if two larger nations reach such an agreement, dividing their spheres of influence, "other nations inevitably will take defensive economic measures and, instead of establishing peace and economic rehabilitation and progress, the result is bound to be a general collapse."

Inviting all lands to join in the American program, he said it is

Undivided Profits Tax Abandoned

House Committee Votes 18 Pct. Levy On Firms Earning Above $25,000

House leaders gave the signal yesterday for rush action on a new corporation tax bill after a Ways and Means sub-committee approved the Treasury program for removal of tax "irritants" and hindrances to investment.

Representative Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, Ways and Means chairman, said the bill, which the sub-committee is drafting, would be taken up in the House Monday if it is completed this week. He intends, he said, to call a meeting of the full committee to approve the bill as soon as the sub-committee concludes its work.

Leaders are working against the calendar on tax legislation. "Nuisance" taxes yielding about $500,000,000 annually expire on June 30, and must be continued in the new revenue bill. Fear that Congress might get into a "jam" on this legislation was one reason President Roosevelt postponed his transcontinental tour.

Profits Tax Abandoned

The ill-fated undistributed profits tax—one of the most unusual experiments in the history of taxation—will be abandoned in the new bill, Representative Cooper (Democrat), of Tennessee, sub-committee chairman, revealed. Its death knell was sounded when Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee, classed it as an "irritant" to business.

The sub-committee voted to substitute for the undistributed-profits tax a flat 18 per cent tax on net income. Since the 2½ per cent vestige of the undistributed-profits tax applied only to corporations earning more than $25,000 a year, the 18 per cent tax will apply only to such corporations. But the new corporation taxes will not apply to 1939. They will take effect next January 1.

As a result, corporations whose profits exceed $25,000 a year will pay a tax of 16½ per cent, plus a 2½ per cent tax on all income withheld from distribution, for 1939, and an 18 per cent tax on incomes realized in 1940 and subsequent years.

Income taxes will remain unchanged for corporations earning $25,000 a year and less.

Agree to Changes

The new bill, it was revealed, will contain no "substitute" for the undistributed profits tax drawn to penalize accumulation by corporations of large surpluses. In agreeing to abandonment of the undistributed profits levy, the President insisted on adequate safeguards against tax dodging by this means.

Subcommittee members insisted that section 102 of existing law, which penalizes undue accumulation of surpluses, affords adequate protection.

The sub-committee agreed to remove from the corporation tax laws

Going to Bat for President:

Col. Harrington Will Testify Today in Defense of WPA

Joseph P. Kennedy, resigned Ambassador to Great Britain, "selling" Franklin D. Roosevelt to the Nation's business and financial circles for a third term!

KENNEDY

Such was the picture presented last night by a current rumor, one of many that, over a period of months, have represented the smiling Irish-American envoy to the Court of St. James's as not entirely happy in his London post and eager to return to America.

Persons close to the New Deal placed credence in the new report. They pointed out that Kennedy, despite early bitter criticism and opposition, brought about Wall street acceptance of regulation by the New Deal's SEC. Then he put into operation the huge program for rebuilding the American Merchant Marine, they recall. Successful in business, finance and speculation, Kennedy is author of a book, "I'm for Roosevelt," written for the purpose of reassuring men of wealth that the New Deal would mean much to the country.

Such a personage, it was contended in party circles, should be a most effective ambassador to those in a position to do much for the party in the way of campaign finances.

In a last-hour defense of the WPA prior to publication of the 1940 relief bill, Col. F. C. Harrington will appear today before a House Appropriations sub-committee that may recommend abolition of his post as sole WPA administrator.

HARRINGTON

The new relief bill, which will be taken up by the House tomorrow immediately after action by the full Appropriations Committee, is believed to contain a provision for a three-man administrative board of the WPA to replace the present single executive officer.

Col. Harrington will offer testimony today in rebuttal of charges brought against the WPA by a long line of witnesses before the sub-committee which has been sitting as a special investigating committee for several weeks. A preliminary report on the investigation is expected to be issued simultaneously with House consideration of the relief bill.

The measure providing relief funds for 1940 is understood to grant WPA practically the entire $1,477,000,000 requested by President Roosevelt, except for $125,000,000 earmarked for the PWA. The Chief Executive had asked for no PWA

House Votes Highest Income Tax for D. C.; Levy Starts at $2,000

Here's What You Would Pay

The District income tax approved by the House applies to all bona fide District residents and others earning their major income here, even though living in suburban Maryland or Virginia. Members of Congress and legislative employes would be exempt. Federal employes paying State income taxes might be.

This would be the District's share of local incomes:

Income.	Tax.	Income.	Tax.
$2,500	$10	$8,000	$210
$3,000	$20	$9,000	$260
$3,500	$35	$10,000	$320
$4,000	$50	$11,000	$380
$4,500	$65	$12,000	$450
$5,000	$80	$15,000	$660
$6,000	$120	$20,000	$1,010
$7,000	$160	$25,000	$1,360

Congress Members And Their Aides Exempted From Retroactive Bill

By James D. Secrest.

The stiffest local income tax in the country was voted for the National Capital by the House yesterday after it had specifically exempted members of Congress and all legislative employes on Capitol Hill. It applies retroactively to last year's earnings.

A solid Republican bloc, assisted by a few Democrats, overrode the House District Committee's recommendation and lowered the income tax from $10,000 to a $2,000 exemption and then eliminated the business-privilege levy.

As the bill now stands it carries no exemptions for married persons or dependents, and the tax scale ranges from 2 to 7 per cent. A married man earning $2,500 would have to pay a tax of $10 on last year's income regardless of the fact that he may have several dependent children.

5 Per Cent on Corporation Net

The tax on corporations is a flat 5 per cent on net income.

The House action came as a surprise in that the same body had twice before rejected an income tax for the District for fear that it would embarrass them back home to exempt themselves. With no election in prospect for another year and because of recent United States Supreme Court decisions, the members adopted an amendment on a voice vote exempting members and their aides upon motion of Representative Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri.

Majority Leader Rayburn gave the more timid members courage when he bluntly told the House that he would not support a bill that taxed his salary or the salaries of his office employes. He explained that Texas has no income tax and so he would not obtain the credits that members of 32 States might claim for income taxes paid in their own districts.

Fair Trade Bill Approved

After passing the mangled District revenue bill, the House approved without debate, objection, or a reading the Kennedy fair trade practices bill which authorizes retailers to enter into agreements with manufacturers to fix retail prices in Washington.

Indications last night were that the income tax provisions, with certain refinements, will become a law and that the business privilege levy will die after two years of stop-gap legislation.

Chairman King of the Senate District Committee, promising speedy consideration of the measure, said:

"I told the members of the House committee that I would never consent to an income tax with a $10,000 base. I have always been for a local income tax. The Senate passed it last year, and I believe it will do so again."

2 Per Cent on First $1,000

The income tax rate, which was intended to apply to earned income in excess of $10,000 and unearned income in excess of $500, now applies to earned income on the following scale after exemption of the basic $2,000 allowance:

Two per cent on the first $1,000, 3 per cent on the next $2,000, 4 per cent on the next $2,000, 5 per cent on the next $2,000, 6 per cent on the next $2,000, and 7 per cent on all taxable income in excess of $9,000. Thus a District resident who earned $10,000 last year would have to pay a tax of $320.

Whether the tax will apply to Federal employes and other District wage earners who maintain legal residences in the States is conjectural and subject to contra-

Brazilian Army Chief To Get Royal Greeting

Nazi Foreign Office Confers With Envoys To South America

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Berlin, June 12.—Germany took its eyes off the rest of Europe and turned its attention across the Atlantic today when the first of a series of important conferences, attended by the Reich's chief diplomatic representatives in Central and South America, was held here at the foreign office.

The ambassadors and ministers have returned to Berlin in the last few days. They met under the leadership of Baron von Weizsaecker, the state secretary for foreign affairs, and tomorrow they will hear Baron Joachim von Ribbentrop, the foreign secretary.

Many Troubles in Americas

It is claimed that the conferences are more or less routine and that the diplomats have returned primarily for the National Socialist Party congress. But the congress does not take place until September, and Germany has many troubles in the Americas which it would like to settle. Besides, the meetings, which also reflect the comparative calm that reigns in Europe these days, will last for some time.

The problems which will be studied are both political and economic. The political difficulty is mixed up with the activities of the association of Germans abroad and some circles in the Wilhelmstrasse hope that the way will be easier for diplomatic officials by tightening the rein on this organization.

Friendly Terms With Brazil

It is said here that the Reich's differences with Brazil are already settled and that tomorrow or the next day a joint statement will be issued by the two governments, announcing that they have decided to forget past quarrels and start off with a clean slate. Dr. Kurt Pruefer is going to Rio de Janeiro as ambassador. Things have not been going so well with Argentina, and it reported that Dr. Eduardo Labougle, the Argentine ambassador, has been ordered to return to his country.

Trade Has Increased

The economic problems are no less important to Germany, but more difficult to solve. Its trade with Central and South American countries has increased tremendously in recent years under the old formula. They send raw material to the Reich and the Reich sends back automobiles, rolling stock, tool machinery and all kinds of iron and steel products. Recently Germany has had trouble making deliveries because of its inability to get hold of all the needed raw materials.

Honors Akin to Those For King and Queen Await Gen. Monteiro

The Army will greet the chief of staff of the Brazilian army on his arrival next week, with ceremonies approaching those arranged for the King and Queen of Great Britain.

A welcoming committee and escort composed of ranking Army officials, planes, tanks, and cavalry will meet the visiting army commander, Gen. Goes Monteiro, when he arrives on the Navy cruiser, Nashville, June 20. After a two-day stay here, America's ranking generals will take him on a tour of the United States.

Gen. Monteiro, heading a military mission of six Brazilian army officials, is returning a courtesy visit made to his country by Brig. Gen. George C. Marshall, deputy chief of staff of the American Army. Marshall, who shortly is to become chief of staff, is now en route to the United States, with the visitors, on the Nashville.

Escort of Planes

Under plans announced yesterday by the War Department, a detachment of planes will escort the Nashville to Annapolis. Gen Malin Craig, chief of staff, a group of ranking officers, and representatives of the State and Navy departments will receive the visitors.

Upon his arrival, Gen. Monteiro will review the midshipmen at the Naval Academy. En route to Washington he will stop off to review the troops at Fort George G. Meade, Md. At the District line four cavalry tanks from Fort Myer will meet the visitors and escort them to the Brazilian embassy. A squadron of cavalry and a band from Fort Myer will be at the embassy to serve as guard of honor.

To Lunch With Roosevelt

While in Washington, June 21 and 22, Gen. Monteiro will have lunch with President Roosevelt, visit Mount Vernon, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the Lincoln Memorial, the Quantico Marine Base, and Fort Myer. He will be the guest of Gen. Craig at a formal dinner, June 21, at the Mayflower Hotel.

On June 23, the Brazilian army chief will embark on an air tour of the United States. He will first go

Glider Pilot Flies Lake Michigan, Claims Record

Frankfort, Mich., June 12 (U.P.).—Ted Bellak, 27-year-old Newark (N. J.) pilot, claimed a new world's record for over water gliding today when he set his sailplane down here after crossing Lake Michigan from Sturgeon Bay, Wis., in 56 minutes.

The distance across the lake is 56 miles from where Bellak started but he reported encountering stiff winds which carried his glider 34 miles off its course, making a total distance of 90 miles.

The longest previous over water glider flight was made April 21 when an English pilot sailed 31 miles across the English Channel.

150 Arrested Here in Raids on Huge Drug Ring

In a surprise series of raids on at least 60 District buildings, 40 Treasury agents together with the pickup and narcotics squads of the Washington police last night and early today arrested more than 150 persons believed to be involved in a huge drug ring.

The raids, carried out secretly, were made in the Second, Fourth, Fifth and Thirteenth precincts, following months of investigation by the United States and District police.

Treasury men were brought in from New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore to help carry out the night-long drive.

Scores of suspects were being brought into police headquarters, precinct stations and the narcotics squad headquarters in the Tower Building to be questioned or charged with violation of the narcotics act.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

THE CROWN AND THE HALO.

Now that the royal guests are out of the house we can talk about them freely. . . . I saw Their Majesties on five different occasions here, and had a chance to observe their personalities and, even more, their technique. . . . I saw some quaint moments, enjoyed a few quiet smiles. But above all I discovered on reflection why George and Elizabeth are well worth $2,050,000 a year.

* * * *

Leah Burket
. . Queen's queries

It struck me suddenly while I was shaving this morning: In their persons are wrapped up not only all the loose ends of kingdom and empire, the calm continuity of reign, but also all the goodness and virtue, actual and potential, of the British people and government. Above their crowns I saw their halos, plain as day, just above the heads of George and Elizabeth.

* * * *

Maybe Chamberlain can be bad on occasion. Perhaps Anthony Eden or Winston Churchill can misbehave. Runciman or plain Bill Tompkins can be naughty; sometimes Lord Halifax and Sir Samuel Hoare and Sir John Simon may infuriate the King's own subjects and outlanders across the seas. But the King and Queen, never; they are always good, if they're really playing their roles.

"—in 1939 the halo is necessary"

This makes it clearer why Edward and Wallis could not serve as King and Queen. They were not willing to do the job. They were not willing to behave as public symbols of saintly virtue and goodliness. They were unwilling to relinquish the frailties permissible to commoners but not to British kings and queens in these troublous times.

They broke their halos.

The Queen is easily worth her $200,000 yearly allowance, she does her job so consummately. The Hollywood gals who draw twice as much a year ought to be ashamed to take the money; compared with Elizabeth they don't earn theirs . . . Like a little girl she has learned her part so well that she enjoys it.

On this visit she has won billions in American affection for the British Empire.

* * * *

Like a little girl reciting a piece, she sometimes overdoes the encores. When the cute little Girl Scout gave her a bouquet, in a ceremony scheduled to last one minute in the White House gardens, Her Majesty chatted on radiantly with the little American, every inch a queen, asking her the meaning of the countless badges sewn on her uniform.

Eventually the King had to nudge her to remind her it was time for him to be presented with a dinosaur's tooth.

"—maybe we could use some halos"

I watched curiously His Majesty's technique as he performed the ritual of laying a wreath at the tomb of our Unknown Soldier, the man who, multiplied by 4,000,000, saved the British Empire in 1918 . . .

His manner was stylized, ceremonial, more military than regal. When he inclined his head in reverence it was a sharp, mechanical nod, from the neck.

A bit more of an obeisance would have been seemly and not unkingly.

* * * *

Obviously the King and Queen are, like most of their subjects, decent, lovable and home-loving . . . Some American husbands might learn a lesson from his extreme doting deference to his consort in public. He pushes her forward, himself to the background, at every chance . . . On second thought, he overdoes it a little.

In the long run it won't do the Throne any good to have the King seem to be too much dominated by the Queen, too obsequious to her.

* * * *

Their behavior was better than ours. In the three places where they met Americans enmasse, at the Embassy, White House and Capitol, our American creme de la creme, whether elected by the people or chosen by Lady Lindsay or Mrs. Roosevelt and the State Department, were too prickly with excitement or awe. Where was the condescension with which George Washington always treated his equals? I am happy to report that the elected members of Congress treated the King more democratically than the gilded gentry.

The halos of George and Elizabeth shine on undimmed. . . . Maybe it would improve American morale if we let our President wear a halo, too, and tax only his Cabinet with wickedness.

Treasury Buys Treadmill For Its Watchdog

By International News Service.

The mythical United States Treasury watchdog apparently is a reality.

Fiscal experts disclosed yesterday the Government is buying a treadmill at a cost of $1,350 for a dog owned by the financial agency. The canine, whose identity was not revealed, serves under the Treasury's Public Health Division, and will be put through the treadmill for scientific research into fatigue.

House May Get Hull Neutrality Bill Today

18 Senators Form 'Battalion of Death' to Fight for Embargo

In the face of solidifying opposition in the Senate, Acting Chairman Bloom of the House Foreign Affairs Committee indicated yesterday that the Administration-approved neutrality bill would be favorably reported today.

Accepting only one minor Republican amendment, the committee yesterday indorsed without record vote provisions of the bill that restrict financial transactions with warring nations and require transfer of title before goods can be shipped to belligerants from the United States. There remain to be approved comparatively non-controversial sections of the bill.

Paragraphs which, in effect, knock out the mandatory war-time arms embargo of the present law and permit the President to establish "combat areas" forbidden to American citizens and ships were approved by the committee last week.

It is around the crucial question of a mandatory arms embargo in time of war that isolationist Senators are rallying for a "last-ditch" fight. A "declaration of principles," stating that no compromise will be made on the arms embargo, received 18 Senatorial signatures yesterday, headed by the name of Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri.

Seen as a veiled threat of filibuster efforts to abolish the arms embargo, the "declaration" failed to visibly disturb Administration leaders in the Senate. Chairman Pittman, of the Foreign Relations Committee, said that prospects that adjournment may be deferred to August made him none the less anxious for Senate consideration of new neutrality legislation.

Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, a foe of placing munitions on a cash-and-carry basis, said he believed the "battalion of death" being formed against repeal of the embargo "will keep Congress in session all summer if necessary to prevent passage of the so-called Administration bill."

Sections of the Bloom bill indorsed at yesterday's meeting of the House Foreign Affairs Committee would make it unlawful to deal in securities of a belligerent government, except that the President may exempt ordinary commercial credits and short-term obligations. Representative Barton (Republican), of New York, obtained adoption of an amendment requiring publicity for such transactions.

The committee also approved provisions forbidding sale of goods to belligerents unless title has been transferred prior to shipment and restricting fund-raising activities in the United States. American republics were exempted from the operation of these sections of the bill.

An effort by Representative Bloom to call an afternoon meeting of the committee in order to complete the bill was defeated by an 11-11 vote, one Democrat joining the Republicans in opposition. Sections of the proposed bill that still remain to be acted upon include provision for continuance of the Munitions Control Board.

Fish Calls It Surrender

Complaining of the tactics of the opposition, Representative Bloom said yesterday that "a week ago they claimed we were trying to rush the bill through before the arrival of the King and Queen; now they say we are trying to take advantage of the popularity of the King and Queen—what are you going to do?"

Representative Fish, of New York, ranking minority member of the committee, admitted that the bill would be favorably reported but denounced it as "a surrender of the war-making powers of the Congress."

Stanford Expert Named to Aid Monopoly Inquiry

Theodore J. Kreps, Stanford University Graduate School professor of business economics, yesterday was appointed as economist and analyst on the staff of the Temporary National Economic Committee, investigating monopolies.

The young economist was chief of the NRA statistics division. Since 1935 he has served at various times in temporary capacities as consultant to the Central Statistical Board, National Resources Committee, Maritime Commission, Works Progress Administration and the Justice Department.

In his new position, for which he is taking a sabbatical year from Stanford, Kreps will analyze and coordinate recommendations of various Governmental agencies taking part in the monopoly study.

based "on the truth that if individual ability and skill can be released generally throughout the world, and if men everywhere can more freely seek and find opportunity to make and exchange, to their mutual advantage, their products and services, a continuing vista of prosperity is possible."

He pointed out that the United States has entered into reciprocal agreements with 20 countries, covering nearly three-fifths of our foreign trade, and added:

"Those who have joined with us to keep open the main highways of peace have benefitted materially. Great nations are more prosperous; small nations are more safe, more free; since they do not have to submit to economic and ultimately political domination in order to live. The contribution already made is one of which this country may be proud. There never will be assured peace, confidence and progress until the peoples of all the leading nations fully realize that economic barriers lie at the root of the world's major ills."

$79,500 Watteau Masterpiece Stolen From Louvre Museum

By the Associated Press.

Paris June 12.—A world-wide alarm was issued today in search for the almost pocket-sized painting of a debonair youth mysteriously pulled from an honor place in the Louvre Museum Sunday.

The picture, Antoine Watteau's L'Indifferent, was described by Louvre experts as one of the finest, although one of the tiniest works by the early eighteenth century master.

The daring, daylight robbery was committed in the filled museum and remained a mystery tonight despite 24 hours of secret search by France's art detectives.

When the lone guard in the gallery wing noticed the picture was missing about 4 p. m. Sunday a "robbery alarm" was sounded. All doors swung shut and dozens of detectives rushed to the scene.

Hundreds of tourists and art lovers in the museum were searched carefully but no trace of the painting was found.

This was kept secret until this afternoon.

France's No. 1 sleuth, Commissaire Andre Roches, called the robbery "daring but easy."

The guard patrolling the wing where the painting hung with hundreds of others told police at least 50 persons were in that part of the gallery at the time. He said an unusual number of people asked him for details about paintings on the opposite side of the gallery.

Louvre officials explained that pictures are fixed fairly loosely on the wall so they could be saved easily in the event of fire.

"L'Indifferent," a 10 by 8 inch portrait of a young man in the elegant cape, cocked hat, lace-edged jacket, tight-fitting pants and silk stockings of a seventeenth century dandy, was valued by art authorities at from $79,500 to $104,000.

Another sensational robbery of the Louvre occurred August 21, 1911, when Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa" was stolen. It was recovered in December, 1913, in Florence, Italy.

funds, but the House sub-committee has decided that the PWA should take over all of the WPA's construction projects costing more than $25,000.

Although a veil of secrecy has been drawn over the sub-committee's deliberations, it is believed that the Federal Theater project will be abolished and that local sponsorship will be required of the other arts projects. Recurrent reports of the impending resignation of Henry J. Alsberg, director of the writers' project, still were unconfirmed last night.

The sub-committee is understood to have imposed certain administrative economies on WPA, especially in regard to travel expenses and telegrams and telephones.

NYA Cut $25,000,000

A slash in the $123,000,000 asked by President Roosevelt for both the NYA and the FSA was decided on by the sub-committee. The NYA was reported to have been cut by at least $25,000,000 and the FSA by $40,000,000 below budget estimates. However, an unconfirmed report received by The Post last night indicated that in an eleventh-hour move the sub-committee restored the FSA appropriation to the full $123,000,000 of the budget.

It is known that severe pressure has been exerted upon all members of the 12-man sub-committee to restore cuts heretofore reported.

A possibility also was indicated that the sub-committee might decide to impose a mandatory two-month furlough of relief workers every 18 months to combat a tendency to make a "career" of relief.

Inventors Given Advice by Court

Inventors who want patents must tell how their devices work and not what they do, with a view to claiming rights to all inventions that do the same thing, the Court of Appeals said yesterday in dismissing an appeal brought by Charles J. Koebel and the Koebel Diamond Tool Co.

The Koebel company claimed a patent for a new way to make diamond tools by mixing cobalt, molybdenum and copper, with just a pinch of iron thrown in. The court, in an opinion by Justice Edgerton, upheld Conway P. Coe, commissioner of patents, in granting patents for alloys for which the proportions were specified but denying a patent for all mixtures of the metals.

$292,695,547 Added to Army Bill in House

Committee Backs Air Force Expansion To 5,500 Planes

Advised by Army chiefs that a general war "may be staved off for a year" but that the world situation "is not encouraging," the House Appropriations Committee yesterday approved an additional $292,695,547 for bolstering America's defenses.

Expansion of the Army plane strength by 2,467 to a total of 5,500 first line airplanes, new pilots and air bases, additional Panama Canal artillery units, and a curtailed "educational" order program are provided in a supplemental Army appropriation bill put before the House. Last major phase of the President's defense program, it will bring the total funds appropriated for the Army at the current session to almost $1,000,000,000.

G. O. P. Move Thwarted

Republican members of the committee unsuccessfully attempted to cut the aviation program by 1,283 planes. However, the committee did "question" the advisability of procuring so many planes in the next two years, and specified in the bill they shall not be constructed unless the President certifies they are "immediately needed in the interests of national defense."

Heeding advice from Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and ranking Army officials that air research funds must be increased if the United States is to catch up with Germany and other European powers in combat plane quality, the committee boosted budget research estimates by $2,000,000. This allowance brings next year's allotment for this purpose to $10,000,000, still only half the amount Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of Air Corps, said was necessary.

Publication of the closed hearings of the committee and the report of the bill revealed the following:

Gen. Arnold testified that the program will provide adequate air defense for the United States despite the fact that planes of foreign nations excel ours in all categories except heavy bombers. The pursuit planes to be constructed will be faster than foreign bombers, though not faster than foreign pursuit planes, a situation that our geographic position makes satisfactory, he said.

Lindbergh Stresses Quality

Col. Lindbergh told the committee we are not subject to serious attack by air, and should therefore attempt to lead in quality rather than quantity. Terming the 5,500-plane program "conservative," the famous flier urged that the United States "push our research as fast as we can" if we hope to regain world leadership in three to five years.

Secretary Woodring indorsed a suggestion from Representative Collins (Democrat), of Mississippi, that a civilian advisory body be created to confer with his on national defense matters. Woodring promised the committee "to work out something" along this line, adding that he had already given some thought to the matter."

A board of civilian advisers to Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson has already been named, Johnson stated, with the specific duty of aiding the War Department in its "educational" orders program.

Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff, told the committee that the WPA has promised them " a minimum of $25,000,000" after July 1, for construction at Army posts. Most of this will be used for construction at Air Corps posts under the expansion program, for only $61,600,000 of the required $84,000,000 for this purpose is included in the bill, officials said.

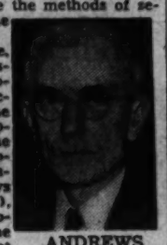
Pa. State Senator Guilty in PWA Case

Philadelphia, June 12 (AP).—A Pennsylvania State Senator, Joseph P. Lando, was convicted in United States District Court today of conspiracy to divert WPA labor to private use.

On Capitol Hill

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Judiciary Committee agreed yesterday to vote June 26 on a proposed constitutional amendment to change the methods of selecting Supreme Court justices.



ANDREWS

The measure, designed to assure that all geographical sections of the country be represented on the court, was introduced by Senator Andrews (Democrat), Florida. It provides that the court have "not less" than nine members, and that no two justices be from a region within the same Circuit Court of Appeals.

The amendment also would provide for at laest nine Circuit Courts of Appeals, composed of at least one judge from each State within each district

Speaker Bankhead predicted yesterday House action at this session on the Hatch bill restricting political activity by Government office holders and forbidding solicitation of campaign funds from relief workers.

He made his prediction after Representative Martin (Republican), Massachusetts, had complained of delay in the consideration of the measure.

The bill, already approved by the Senate, has been pending before the House Judiciary Committee since April 20, Martin said, and should be brought out soon. He added in a statement that "I propose to exert every influence at my command to bring about enactment this session."

By International News Service.

The House Rules Committee last night granted legislative right of way to the drastically revised Norris bill to authorize the TVA purchase of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, of Texas, announced it would be brought up for action today in the House, with a view to its passage that will send it back to the Senate for adjustment of differences.

The Military Committee cut the TVA's bond issuing authority from $100,000,000 to $65,000,000, and provided that TVA and not the Federal Government should guarantee the bonds.

By International News Service.

In a sudden change of strategy, Townsend old-age pension advocates in the Senate yesterday decided to work for a constitutional amendment instead of asking the Senate to vote on the pension plan as an amendment to the social security act.

The House having killed the Townsend plan by an overwhelming majority, leading Senate supporters of it said it would be futile at this time to fight for legislation. It should be referred to the people in the form of a constitutional amendment, Senator Andrews (Democrat), of Florida, said after conferring with Dr. Francis E. Townsend, father of the revolving-old-age-pension scheme. The Townsendites, however, will attempt to have the social security act liberalized so as to allow $40 monthly to aged single persons and $60 for married heads of families.

U. S. Wins Draft Discharge Suit

Justice O'Donoghue yesterday dashed the hopes of 194,000 holders of discharge-from-draft certificates by ruling that the Secretary of War could not be compelled to follow them up with honorable discharges, which would make the holders eligible to hospitalization at Government expense.

The certificates were issued in the World War to men found unfitted for service. Lloyd M. Davis sued to compel the War Department to exchange his certificate for an honorable discharge from the Army.

High-Pressure Insurance Sales Hit Before Monopoly Inquiry

William Montgomery, president of the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., told the monopoly committee yesterday that "high pressure salesmanship" was one of the principal reasons for the large percentage of lapses on life insurance policies.

With Federal regulatory legislation a possibility, the committee devoted particular attention to policy lapses in its study of insurance termination.

It received data from the Securities and Exchange Commission showing that, of the $126,000,000,000 of life insurance which terminated in the 1928-37 decade, 33 per cent was terminated through "frustration of the policyholders' plans"—that is, by lapse, surrender or decrease of amount carried. Only 6.59 per cent was terminated by death of the insured person.

"Poor Men" Hard Hit

Dr. Donald H. Davenport, Harvard University professor, told the committee that holders of "industrial" or "poor man's" insurance had lost at least $1,419,422,804 of savings by lapse or surrender of their policies in the 20-year period ending with 1937.

Testimony on policy lapses turned the attention of committee members to what Jerome Frank, SEC chairman and a committee member, described as "the anthropological tendency to want to grow." It was agreed that in the life insurance business great stress is placed on the size of the company.

"One might question," Frank said, "whether this eagerness to grow ought not to be curbed."

Acacia Plan Held Desirable

The SEC, which is conducting the insurance company presentation, attempted to show, in Acacia, examples of methods designed to hold down the proportion of lapses.

It was the second time that Acacia had been brought before the committee as an example of what is desirable in insurance company practices. On the previous occasion the SEC was presenting a picture of the way directors are elected.

Montgomery criticized the tendency to "push agents too hard," and agreed that there was "too much emphasis on size."

"So far as the policyholder is concerned," he declared, "if size doesn't reduce cost, improve service or give added strength, there is no particular advantage in it."

Firm Cut Premiums

He said Acacia had tried to sell "quality business that will stay on the books." The company, he said, does not pay the usual renewal commission, and "pays agents in proportion to the business they serve and keep in force." Instead of paying the customary dividends he declared, Acacia in 1936 cut its premiums, feeling that it was better "not to take a man's money than to take it with the intention of paying some of it back to him."

The large percentage of lapses, he believed, is due partly to prospects of dividends, which he said belongs to high pressure salesmanship technique.

John M. Holcomb, director of the Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau, Hartford, Conn., agreed in response to questions by Leon Henderson, SEC member, that commissions paid agents "theoretically would be a factor" in the large percentage of lapses.

Henderson asked whether the "cafeteria method" of selling insurance in vogue in some countries would be desirable. Under this method, people who want insurance come and get it. Holcomb insisted that the agency system should be preserved.

Grew, in the United States on leave, said he expected to see President Roosevelt, probably today.

Grew said he could not talk for publication on the Far Eastern situation.

Hague Police Guard Civil Liberty Rally

Only One Heckler Evicted as 10,000 Hear Norman Thomas

By the Associated Press

Jersey City, N. J., June 12.—American Civil Liberties Union speakers, guarded by police who in the past had ejected their colleagues from Journal Square, hailed tonight on the same site the recent United States Supreme Court decision denying Mayor Frank Hague the power to prevent public assembly.

Only one incident marred an otherwise orderly meeting, attended by a crowd which Arthur Garfield Hays, lawyer and counsel to the A. C. L. U., estimated was between 10,000 and 15,000.

At the conclusion of the rally, Norman Thomas, Socialist leader, was followed across the square by a large crowd, composed largely of youths, who hooted and jeered as he made his way to the Hudson tubes accompanied by Miss Dorothy Dunbar Bromley, New York newspaper columnist and A. C. L. U. director.

Thomas, ejected from Journal Square a year ago when he attempted to make a speech, cried "Three cheers for Jersey City back in America" when he began his talk over a public address system tonight.

"The test still lies ahead when the unions start to organize," he added. "At other meetings there'll be no cameras and no publicity. Will the mob do what the law can't do?"

An occasional heckler was admonished by police, who were present in large numbers. One heckler was ejected when, after introduction of William Callahan, editor of the Catholic Worker, he shouted, "That's a Communist paper."

Senate Votes $135,000 to Give HopkinsExpertAid

A vehement attack by Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, failed yesterday to prevent the Senate from voting a new appropriation of $135,500 to provide "a highly qualified executive staff" to assist Secretary of Commerce Hopkins in his "business appeasement" program.

With several members of the "economy bloc" absent, the Senate approved, 41 to 23, an amendment to the State, Justice and Commerce Appropriation bill that would permit Hopkins to hire, without regard to civil service laws, "experts and specialists" at rates of pay not above $9,000 a year.

The bill, providing $122,624,410 for the three departments, was approved and sent to conference.

The bill would give the Department of Justice $265,200 above the House bill. The Senate suggested that $50,000 be specifically for investigation and prosecution of civil liberties violations.

Chevy Chase Youth Rescues Drowning Chum From River

William J. Blackwood (left) of 6315 Maple avenue, Chevy Chase, Md., shakes hands and thanks Percival D. Lowell, of 6413 Maple avenue, Chevy Chase, Md., a school chum, for rescuing him while the two were swimming Friday near Great Falls. Both youths are juniors at Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School

Father of Boy Saved to Seek Hero Medal; Lad Saw Other Sinking, Resuscitated Him on Mid-Stream Rock

How a Chevy Chase High School youth rescued an unconscious classmate from the Potomac, resuscitated him on a rock in the river and then brought him safely ashore, was revealed last night by parents of the boy who was saved.

The two youths, William J. Blackwood, jr., 17, of 6315 Maple avenue, Chevy Chase, and his chum, Percival D. Lowell, jr., also 17, of 6413 Maple avenue, Chevy Chase, went swimming Friday in the river near Great Falls.

They swam out to a large rock near the middle of the river, but Blackwood, nominally a good swimmer, apparently had been weakened by a recent illness.

Saw Chum Going Down

As the Lowell boy modestly described the incident to a Post reporter last night:

"I was on the rock looking for a log when Bill dived in. I heard him holler "Hey" and I turned in time to see Bill struggling. I saw him going down, so I ran across the rock, dived in and swam about 75 feet to the spot where I had seen Bill sink.

"I caught hold of Bill's arm about 5 feet under the surface. He didn't struggle and I knew he must be unconscious.

"I managed to carry him to the island. His tongue was badly swollen. I worked on him for half an hour, pumping out the water the way I used to practice doing for the fun of it with the other boys.

Father to Ask Medal

"When Bill recovered consciousness, we rested about 15 minutes. Then I put him on the log and floated him ashore."

The two boys kept the story of the rescue within their families and it was not disclosed until yesterday.

Blackwood, whose father is attached to the Bureau of Standards, is a talented musician and plays both the saxaphone and clarinet in the school band. Lowell has been his friend and neighbor for many years.

Last night Blackwood's father said he intended to seek a Carnegie heroism medal for the boy who saved his only son.

answered the question he would reveal the source of his information.

"Did your informant tell you what rooms were wired?" Shafer asked.

"He told me a room was wired," Chinn replied. "He didn't say which one. I assumed it was the committee room."

Stevens replied "I don't know," when asked if his informant still maintained there were dictographs on Capitol Hill. He insisted that Romney told him he "knew" the devices were there.

Secrest declared he had "grave doubts," and was "inclined to be skeptical" about the dictographs" in the face of denials from Representative Bates (Democrat), of Kentucky, subcommittee chairman, and J. Edward Burroughs, committee counsel.

Dictographs Downtown

Capt. Truscott testified that he supervised installation of dictographs in two downtown hotels and two downtown office buildings, but nowhere else. An installation, he said, was made in the offices of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association and of the association's attorneys to record conversations of Whiting Faulkner, Martinsburg, W. Va., postmaster, who had been accused of offering his services as lobbyist.

Faulkner is a constituent of Representative Randolph, chairman of the House District Committee, of which the milk committee was a part.

Truscott denied "positively" that the installations had been made with any intention of embarrassing members of Congress. His testimony supported public statements of Maj. Brown, superintendent of Metropolitan Police, who disclaimed knowledge of whereabouts of transcripts of the recordings. Truscott said he turned the original and copy over to Bates, keeping for his own records "certain original notes."

One of the first questions asked Felber was:

"Have you ever been threatened by any member of this committee with reprisals if you didn't give certain testimony?"

"Absolutely not," was Felber's reply.

Shafer then asked if he ever had uttered any threats, to which Felber replied, "No, sir!"

Felber then was asked to recall a conversation between himself and Police Judge Edward Curran on which he reported, in effect, as follows:

Curran called Felber to the bench one day and asked him what was back of the milk case and what Corporation Counsel Seal had against him to make him take prosecution of the Fairfax-Embassy milk case before another police judge. Felber said he told Curran that the corporation counsel felt the judge to be friendly to the defendants.

Admits Tapping Wires

Felber insisted repeatedly there had been no dictographing at the House Office Building. His assertion was backed by Private Bradford who said he also was somewhat of an expert at telephone wire-tapping, but "not in this case." He said he was "pretty certain" he never had tapped the wires of the Fairfax-Embassy Dairy, though he was unable to say whether or not the telephones of some dairy officials had been tapped.

Bradford aroused the ire of several committee members by a statement that in some cases he tapped telephone lines "on my own initiative."

At one point in his testimony, Romney said he was not "sure either way" about the dictaphones but later he said he had not been convinced by the previous testimony. "Ordinarily," he said, "I would take a newspaper man's word before that of a detective."

The sergeant-at-arms and Capitol police head said several members of the committee had told him they "knew" the dictograph had been installed at the Capitol and that one House member had given him a "Masonic oath" on his knowledge of the presence of the device. Romney, asked by Bates to reveal the representative's name, refused.

Edward Brown, superintendent of the building, testified that he had begun an investigation after rumors of the presence of dictographs and before reports of their existence had been published. He said he found some old, painted telephone wires, but no evidence of recording installations.

Bates, at the hearing's end, said he was satisfied no "fair-minded" observer could longer believe the dictograph stories. He said his committee would meet tomorrow and possibly be ready to report a bill to set up a District milk commission.

In his report to Bankhead, Romney suggested summoning policemen and reporters, declared the right of members of Congress to privacy to be at stake and revealed that Julia Castleman, former Bates committee clerk, had told him she had talked on the telephone with Faulkner only from her home at 1366 Otis place northwest or from her office.

At an afternoon session the committee heard a General Accounting Office accountant, Glen Rose, give it is his opinion that a 1-cent drop in the retail price on a quart of milk in the District would lose one of the dairies more than $78,000 a year.

Dr. Smith Will Take Stand Today

Ousted Girls Training School Head Will Defend Her Record

As the climax to three weeks of testimony—most of it damaging to her regime—Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, ousted superintendent of the National Training School for Girls, will take the stand at 2 p. m. today to defend her record of two years at the institution.

Five of Dr. Smith's witnesses were called yesterday. They were Ray Everett, secretary of the Social Hygiene Society of Washington; Dr. John E. Noble and Dr. Thomas C. Thompson, of the District Health Department; Mrs. Charles Weston, vice president of the Voteless League of Women Voters, and the Rev. Charles Warner, pastor of St. Albans Church.

Theories Approved

While advocating as "productive of some results" some of Dr. Smith's theories—such as kindness, sex hygiene, education and personal conferences—Everett declared that "kindness will not work for all girls."

Dr. Warner, who has conducted religious services at the institution for 30 years, was asked by Dr. Smith concerning behavior of girls during her stay there. "Pretty good, but not so good as during the term of your predecessor," he replied.

Asked how it was immediately after her dismissal, he replied, "It was very bad, indeed."

Behavoir "Much Better"

"And how is it now?" Oliver Gasch, of the Corporation Counsel's office, asked. To this Dr. Warner said, "It is much better."

Dr. Smith said that after completing her testimony, during which she hoped numerous questions would be asked, she would be given 10 days "in which to sum up my case and show why I should not have been thrown out without a hearing of any kind."

U. S. Mediators Seek to End D. C. Strikes

Bakers' Walkout Still Threatens After Conference

Labor Department conciliators worked feverishly yesterday to return striking carpenters and building laborers to work and avert a threatened walkout by union bakers.

At nightfall, this was the situation:

Carpenters—The first day of their strike completed, with John T. Oakley, secretary of the union, estimating 1,000 members out, another 500 at work on jobs where the contractors agreed to pay the $1.62½ an hour demanded and the ramaining 500 members unaffected because they are employed at the Navy Yard or in other industries not affiliated with the building trades.

Laborers—Began the second week of their strike, with hope for settlement remote. Another conciliation meeting is scheduled for 2 p. m. today. Union officials estimate 1,800 on strike, another 400 having gone back to work since the walkout began on June 5 under temporary agreements which accede to the demands for 10 to 25 cents per hour wage increases.

Bakers—Conciliation meeting between union representatives and employers' committee broke up without any agreement, but another conference will be held at 2 p. m. today. Breakdown of negotiations might result in a walkout of 600 bakers and helpers who, according to Charles B. McClosky, business agent, produce 95 per cent of the bread consumed in Washington.

Commencement of the carpenters' strike was without incident. There was no picketing. Only major construction project at which the men reported was the National (Mellon) Gallery of Art, where the general contractor, Vermilya-Brown, Inc., signed a temporary agreement in order to prevent cessation of operations.

The company also signed a separate agreement with the laborers union last week, both of the pacts bearing the indorsement of the gallery's trustees.

Work on other large Government jobs, however, including the National Institute of Health at Bethesda, Md., and the Jefferson Memorial, was at a standstill yesterday.

Halifax Denies Return to Appeasement

Britain Ready to Meet Force With Force, He Tells House of Lords

By the Associated Press.

London, June 12.—In a speech designed to drive away any suspicion that the British government was planning to return to "appeasement," Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax told the House of Lords today that Britain was prepared to meet force with force.

Halifax said the world today was in an "era of power politics" and served notice that the British government had no intention of changing her policy of "resistance against force."

He said, "The spirit of the people of these islands today is far more robust and united than in 1914."

In the course of a long debate in the House of Lords, Halifax outlined the government's policy as follows:

If force "is used today, those who use it must count on force being met by force."

If there is "no attempt or intention to resort to force, the whole influence of this country * * * will be thrown and rightly thrown on the side of reaching a fair settlement by negotiation."

Confused Thinking"

The foreign secretary asserted the world was facing two alternatives, and today's debate would be worth while if it "has the effect of focusing the attention of all whom it might reach upon the incalculable advantage of changing the threatening, dangerous and sinister methods of arbitrary force to methods of negotiation and peaceful settlement."

Referring to criticisms of his speech to lords last Thursday, when he expressed Britain's willingness to negotiate Germany's claims for economic "living space," Halifax said:

"It is a sign of confused thinking to argue that my speech last Thursday implied any change whatever in British policy. On the contrary, it was a perfectly frank attempt to get people here and elsewhere to face the realities of the situation."

He said Britain would judge the intentions of other countries in deciding whether to discuss their claims by the "spoken words and acts" of those who control these countries.

Firm Toward Japan

A few hours before Halifax spoke William Strang, foreign office expert on central European affairs, left by plane for Moscow as a special envoy with a new formula which the British government hoped finally would produce the long-negotiated British-French-Russian mutual assistance pact. This would fill the last gap in the British-French led bloc of nations.

British Foil Plot

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, June 12.—A heavy police guard was placed about the home of the British Ambassador to China tonight after discovery of a plot against his life.

Precautions to protect the ambassador, Sir Archibald John Clark Kerr, were taken amid increasing British-Japanese friction at Tientsin and Japanese preoccupation with a poisoned wine conspiracy in which two Japanese officials died at Nanking.

Nationality of persons concerned in threats against Sir Archibald was not disclosed by British authorities and conflicting unofficial reports attributed them respectively to Chinese and Japanese.

Plot Declared "Grave"

A British authority said information of the plot was considered "authentic and accurate" and was "of a grave nature." Machine-guns were said to have been placed at corners of the wall surrounding Sir Archibald's residence, in the western section of the International Settlement near the Japanese controlled area.

Officers of the British Embassy in downtown Shanghai also were under guard and the ambassador was provided with a bulletproof automobile. Sir Archibald was appointed ambassador December 20, 1937, to replace Sir Hughe Montgomery Knatchbull-Hugessen, who was wounded when Japanese machine-gunned his automobile August 26, 1937.

2 Species of New and Rare African Pigs Share Same Suite Amicably at the Zoo

In less than two days after he was born, father and mother blue sheep led their young offspring, born at 10 a. m. Sunday, into the Zoo pasture for exercise and food. The family is shown at top. Below, Kewpie, one of the new forest hogs at the Zoo

Ordinarily "pigs is pigs," as Ellis Parker Butler once said, but the swine that went on exhibition yesterday at the Zoo call for special consideration.

One of the two new specimens is a giant forest hog, believed to be the first ever brought into the United States. The other is a white-faced bush pig, which is somewhat more common but still a good show piece.

Since both are Africans and of the female sex, Head Keeper William H. Blackburne figured they would get along nicely together in the same pen and his deduction was vindicated when they were made roommates. No two animals of different species ever romped more happily with each other.

The giant forest hog is so rare in this country that little is known about its habits, maximum size or other peculiarities. Two were imported by Raymond and Benjamin Lepow, brothers, the other specimen going to the Bronx Zoo.

Also making its debut yesterday was a blue sheep, born Sunday morning. It is the second offspring of the pair which the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Institution expedition brought back in 1937.

The blue sheep, a cross between sheep and goat, inhabits Central China.

House Votes D. C. Income Tax

dictory opinions, but the bill does provide that "in the case of any corporation or a nonresident individual, gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the District of Columbia."

Suburbanites Affected

The tax, if enacted into law, will apply to the incomes of persons living in suburban Maryland and Virginia and working in Washington, but credits will be allowed for payments to the States.

Lowering of the income tax base and elimination of the business privilege tax from the District revenue bill represented a victory for two Republican members of the sub-committee which drafted the bill and a setback for Chairman Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma.

The amendments were offered by Representatives Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, and supported by Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois.

Dirksen's first motion to lower the income tax base to $2,500 was defeated, and it was only after Cochran's amendment to exempt members of Congress and legislative employes was adopted without a record vote that the Bates amendment dropping the income tax to $2,000 was adopted.

Objects to Partisanship

Nichols used every parliamentary maneuver to defeat the minority bloc and then complained against the injection of "partisan politics" into a District legislative fight.

The income tax amendment was adopted on a roll call vote of 186 to 130, and the business privilege tax section was stricken on a roll call vote of 149 to 57.

Democratic members from Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina joined the Republicans in voting down the gross receipts tax because of its application to produce sold in the Capital by manufacturers and producers of these States.

Other provisions of the revenue measure, upon which no estimates as to yield have been made, were adopted without objection.

These include a 2 per cent gross receipts parking lot tax, higher inheritance and gift levies, a sliding scale plan which enables the Commissioners to fix the real estate tax at or below the present $1.75 rate, a limitation on the Federal contribution to $5,000,000, and authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to make advances to the District. It repeals the intangible personal property tax.

Nichols at the outset of the House debate explained that the $5,000,000 lump sum limitation was written into the bill because of the Senate action in raising the amount in the 1940 District supply bill to $7,750,000. He stated that the limitation, if adopted by the Senate, would apply regardless of the action of the conferees on the money measure.

The sub-committee chairman defended the bill as reported, even against the objections of Cochran and other members that "you're taxing the people in my State and yours on the business they do in the National Capital."

Nichols said that he believed a tax on such outside business firms is only fair.

Arguing against the proposals to lower the income tax base, Nichols said that the additional revenue was not needed. That statement was made, however, before the business privilege levy, which yields around $2,000,000 a year, was eliminated.

Nichols defended the District's realty tax and what he termed generally low taxes.

"Until three years ago when I took charge of writing District tax bills," he said, "this was a tax haven of the world. There was no community whose citizens so completely escaped the tax burden of the local government."

Exemption Defended

Nichols defended the exemption of members of Congress from the tax, although the Cochran amendment had not at that time been adopted.

"I'm not afraid to tell my constituents that I voted to eliminate myself from District taxation," he said. "We come here not of our own volition. I'd have to live here if we had to use tents and had no police and fire departments."

At the same time he defended the $5,000,000 Federal contribution as compensation for District services to the National Government of overlapping governments and and pointed out that the absence bonded indebtedness always would keep District taxes above the average of the country.

"You'll never get the District on a parity with the States in the matter of local taxes," he said.

Before his own amendment was defeated, Dirksen warned members against going home and defending a vote for an income tax that starts at $10,000.

"You'll hear about it in the next campaign if you do," he said. "Gentlemen, you'll be in a hot spot."

After the Bates amendment had been adopted by a division vote, but before the roll call, Nichols took the floor and angrily charged the minority with injecting "partisan politics" into the fight over the District bill.

Citing the vote of 88 to 29 in the committee of the whole, he asserted that 86 were Republicans.

"Where were the rest of the Democrats?" inquired Representative Michener (Republican), of Michigan.

Members Jeer

As members jeered, he then charged that the Bates amendment would shift the tax burden to the lower wage earners.

"Didn't President Roosevelt advocate the income tax?" asked Representative Cole (Republican), of New York.

"The President approved this tax bill with the sales tax in it for the District," replied Nichols. "Of course, he favors an income tax for national purposes."

After Nichols had concluded, Dirksen arose and said he "hoped Mr. Nichols didn't mean what he said."

Dirksen stated that there had been "happy fellowship" among members of the District Committee and that no "partisan politics" had been used or should be injected into the debate on the District revenue measure.

"I'm sure the gentleman would not accuse me of practicing partisan politics," remarked Chairman Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia.

Three minor bills, besides the fair trade practices bill, were adopted by unanimous consent. The committee earlier had decided not to call up the controversial McGehee bill to amend the District unemployment act after a stormy discussion in committee session.

The bills approved authorize the Commissioners to sell unused park areas with the consent of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, extend the Shipstead zoning act to property adjacent to Lafayette Park, and authorize the Columbia Institution for the Deaf to exchange a small tract of land with the Interior Department.

Pension Bills Referred

Bills to give judges of police and juvenile courts a pension were referred to the House Judiciary Committee upon motion of Chairman Randolph.

Committee members clashed heatedly over the McGehee bill and a question of whether or not adequate hearings had been held after Randolph read a letter from the Commissioners pointing out that the Social Security Administration had raised certain objections to the measure, which would divorce the District board from the Social Security Board.

Objections also were raised against the Vreeland bill to abolish the Commission on Mental Health on the ground that no hearings were held before it was approved in executive session last week. The bill was not called upon the District day calendar, although the committee did not agree to hold hearings.

Hungary May Take Minority's Lands

Budapest, June 12 (A.P.).—Outright expropriation of Jewish-owned lands to provide an initial 500,000 acres for Hungary's landless peasants will be proposed to Parliament by the government, authoritative reports said tonight. It was learned also that Premier Count Paul Teleky's cabinet proposed to expropriate 10 per cent of all Aryan-owned estates above 700 acres.

The premier presented his plan for land reform to 200 members of the government's Hungarian Life Party who assembled for today's opening session of Parliament.

Polish Customs Official Reported Beaten in Danzig

By the United Press.

Warsaw, June 12.—The beating of a Polish customs official by Danzig Germans and a Nazi warning that Poland is "steering a perilous course" tonight intensified friction between Warsaw and Berlin.

Simultaneously, the Danzig newspaper "Danziger Vorposten" alleged that three Poles seized a German and emasculated him.

The incident involving the customs official followed the slaying of a 22-year-old youth by Polish border guards when he tried to cross the frontier into Germany.

Polish newspapers said the customs officer was beaten by Danzig residents.

The Danzig version of the incident said the officer confessed that he was an agent for the Polish intelligence service.

Danzig officials today decided to ignore a Polish threatening, according to Danzig reports, an economic boycott of Danzig. The note rejected a demand that the number of Polish customs guards be reduced in the Danzig area.

House Speeds Tax Bill to Passage

three other irritants and hindrances to investment of idle money in productive enterprise. These changes, which will apply to all corporations, follow:

Provision for a carryover of net operating losses for two years.

Provisions permitting corporations "caught in a pinch" on excess profits taxes to revise their capital stock valuation upward, and thus cut down their profits percentage, in 1939 and 1940. Existing law permits corporations to revise their capital stock valuation up or down every three years, and they could not revalue again until 1941, as matters stand.

Removal of the existing $2,000 limitation on the amount of net capital losses which could be deducted from other income in computing net income for tax purposes. The sub-committee, however, agreed to remove the limitation only with respect to long-term capital losses—that is, losses on bonds, stocks or property held more than 18 months. If held less than this time, losses sustained could be deducted only from short-term capital gains—not other income—and could be carried over to apply against short-term capital gains in the next year.

Special Features

Certain tax law changes having special, rather than general, application will be included in the new tax bill, Cooper disclosed. They are:

Banks, insurance companies China trading act corporation, and corporations in United States possessions, will be treated as other corporations. They now pay a flat 16½ per cent levy. Mutual investment companies will have to pay 18 per cent, regardless of income, but the existing deduction for dividends will be continued.

Corporations in bankruptcy or receivership, joint stock land banks, and rental housing corporations will be treated as other corporations. Repeal of the undistributed profits tax will make unnecessary continuance of the 2½ per cent credit for these corporations.

Foreign corporations doing business in this country will be taxed 18 per cent at the source of income, a 1 per cent reduction. Foreign corporations not doing business here, but receiving dividends, interest, rents, loyalties, etc., will continue to pay 15 per cent on all except dividends, and 10 per cent on the latter.

Cooper explained that no special treatment would be accorded railroads in the new bill, as rail interests had requested.

Expiring nuisance taxes, he said, will be continued another two years, along with the 3-cent first-class postage rate.

Treasury experts estimate that, on the basis of the level of business this year, the tax changes would result in a revenue loss of only $15,700,000 next year. Since the changes involve levies and charges totaling about $1,800,000,000 annually, this is regarded as inconsequential.

Paramount Plans Smart Advertising Campaign

Recognizes Newspapers as Best Sales Medium; 'Cinderella Girl' Signs Term Film Contract; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

FURTHER WORD from the Paramount world convention, being held in Los Angeles, indicates that this pioneer company plans to follow the lead of some of its major contemporaries and devote as much analytical thought to the marketing of the new year's product as to its production.

BELL

Robert M. Gillham, director of publicity and advertising, in a week-end speech, told the 275 delegates from all parts of the world that Paramount's experience had proved that newspaper advertising brings the biggest returns. Insofar as Washington is concerned, we could have told him that long ago.

But Mr. Gillham's crafty schemes for getting his pictures before their most likely potential audiences embraces other procedures. Paramount, it seems, has gone so far as to check the bookstores and circulating libraries of the country to determine what class of readers have shown most interest in the books which they plan to bring to the screen in picturized form during 1939-40. The volume and placing of magazine advertising will be allotted largely on the basis of this minute analysis of where it will do the most good.

Take Lloyd C. Douglas' "Disputed Passage" for example. It was found that this "best seller" had had a predominantly feminine buying public. Hence, near the release date of the picture, a concentrated advertising campaign will be launched in the women's magazines.

This national policy of Paramount's is along the lines of one pursued by your reporter many years ago when he, too, was intrusted with the marketing of films to a purely local public. It was definitely determined then that the newspapers were the most valuable advertising medium the theaters had. This is true in Washington perhaps beyond the measure of any other city in the country, and for established reasons.

Theater audiences in the National Capital are drawn in greatest numbers from employes of the Government, who hold their posts by virtue of competitive mental tests—civil service examinations—and represent a higher average intelligence than the public of any other city. They are newspaper readers first and magazine and book readers second. That is reflected in the daily circulation of the local press.

In making its decision Paramount has displayed as great acumen as in the choice of subjects to be filmed on its new program, the details of which were set forth in this space several days ago.

Post ads bring results. (Advt.)

Announcement is made by Director Howard F. Wentworth that open tryouts for the Cross Roads Theater production of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the George M. Cohan mystery-comedy, based on the novel by Earl Derr Biggers, are being held every night this week at the Cross Roads, down at Bailey's Cross Roads, Va., beginning at 8:30 o'clock. The production is still some weeks away, but Mr. Wentworth and his associates evidently believe in taking time by the fetlock, or something.

Now, at last, the immortal music of "Pagliacci" comes to the screen. Beginning tomorrow, the Little Theater will present a film version of the famous Leoncavallo work, practically in its entirety. To the best of my knowledge and belief, this is the first time an attempt has been made to photograph even a brief grand opera in full.

The leading role will be sung by the world famous tenor, Richard Tauber. Playing opposite, in the role of Nedda, will be Steffi Duna, remembered as the little singing spitfire in the Technicolor production of "La Cucaracha." She also may be remembered as the young woman whose likeness appeared at the bottom of this page yesterday morning. Her operatic experience includes appearances with the Budapest Opera Company.

In addition to its familiar music, "Pagliacci," of course, also tells the highly dramatic story of the tragic clown, who, in the play within the play, adds realistic tragedy to what is merely supposed to be "play acting."

So Mr. J. Raymond Bell—no relation—Loew's loewcal publicist, just back from that prize-award trip to "Paris in the spring," drops by the desk to say "hello and isn't it fun to get back to work?" The other Mr. Bell, quite evidently, is indulging in a little reverse English, double talk, or something of the kind. Strained to a deep walnut tan by the rays of the sun that shrines over France, the Riviera and the Atlantic Ocean, Master Bell seems to be in the pink—if you can do with a scrambled color scheme. He gets back in the saddle this morning by screening "It's a Wonderful World," with James Stewart and Claudette Colbert, for the drama desks. The picture comes into Loew's Capitol on Friday.

It seems worth another paragraph that Ray brought back from Paris and London warmest greetings to their many Washington friends from Arthur and Helen De Titta and Charlie and Virginia Raymond.

Arthur De Titta, as everyone knows, was formerly Washington manager of Fox Movietone News. Charlie Raymond dates back a little farther than that. Years ago, when the house was flourishing, he was managing director of the Rialto Theater. That would be back about 1925. He then was appointed to a managership in London, later transferred to Johannesburg, South Africa, and subsequently returned again to London. Mr. and Mrs. Raymond have not set foot in the United States for the past seven years.

Mrs. Raymond is the daughter of the late Jacques Futrelle, noted writer, who perished on the Titanic. She has a brilliant soprano voice and some years ago was heard in stage engagements in the Loew houses in this city. Nice to hear from these old friends.

Mary Martin, toast of New York and the girl who made "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" not only a song hit but a household phrase throughout America, last week ended protracted and bitter competition for her services among all the major studios on the West Coast by signing a long-term Paramount contract. Her first assignment will be opposite Allan Jones in "Victor Herbert." She will arrive on the Coast about July 1, leaving Manhattan desolate.

AN IMPORTANT movie official is now being indicted for evasion of income taxes . . . A month ago, when this column announced that the King and Queen had expressed a desire to attend a press conference at the White House—and that they would attend such a conference—the Washington correspondents quoted "a White House spokesman," who denied that story. Last Friday Their Majesties attended Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference . . . Aldous Huxley has contributed his London home for use by refugees. Huxley, now in California, has regained his sight by means of eye exercises. His new novel is being completed . . . Oscar Levant, who is 32, says that he has taken off his short pants—and no longer wants to become the world's oldest prodigy.

"I HAD LUNCH at the House of Commons," writes Jerome Weidman from London, "and as we went into the dining room Anthony Eden suddenly got up from his table. He accidentally poked me in the ribs with his elbow as he passed me and I let out an excited 'Hey!' as I almost fell. Eden grabbed me and set me on my feet, and said politely: 'American?' I was embarrassed because I'd let out a yelp like that, so I blushed and said: 'Yes, how did you know?' Eden grinned and said: 'You moved toward the left as you stumbled; an Englishman always moves toward the right.'"

MEYER DAVIS, who played at the World's Fair reception to Their Majesties Saturday, played at most of the receptions for Edward, Prince of Wales, during his American visit . . . The Securities and Exchange Commission is delving into the practices of insurance companies purchasing stock without going into the public markets . . . Friends of H. L. Phillips suspect that he also is the "Dave Boone" who writes a column on the same page . . . The Italian government reneged in its promise to lend two important paintings to the "Masterpieces of Art" show at the fair . . . Mussolini's unwillingness was based on his dislike for New York's anti-Fascist mayor, who participated in the formal opening of the show.

PROF. EINSTEIN visited Judge Irving Lehman at the Bar Building Thursday and waited in his car downstairs. When questioners surrounded him he replied. "No, no—I'm not the great Einstein." Later he explained that this is his usual answer to curiosity seekers, because "it is both truthful and modest" . . . "True, I couldn't accept Aquacade engagements," writes James Melton, "account of my Ford broadcasts which originated Detroit and Cincinnati opera. But I am not engaged at the Met" . . . Al Wagstaff 3d, who today will marry the daughter of Seena Owen, the star of the silent screen, refused to participate in a bachelor's party last night. Instead, he took his new mother-in-law to the night clubs.

EVEN IN DEATH, Jackie Osterman drew bad notices. For the obituaries were not very kind to him, and the swing bands of Broadway last night played no elegies . . . But at the bars where Jackie preferred to drench the brilliance which was his they told these stories:

HE ONCE SAW Tommy Manville arrive early at the opening of a show. "Manville," Jackie greeted, "I suppose you came on time—out of respect to the Asbestos" . . . When he was working at the Mirador he discovered 100 cakes of ice in front of that club. "Tell me," he asked the owner of the place, "are we playing 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' or breaking in a cooling system?" He boasted to Beatrice Lillie that he, too, had lived at the swanky Savoy in London. "How long did you live there?" asked Bea. "Until I found out," said Jackie, "how much a guinea was."

WHEN HE was subpenaed to appear in City Court concerning a judgment against him, the clerk called his name three times, without response, and so Jackie was cited for contempt of court. Then he went to the clerk's desk . . . "Why didn't you answer when I called your name?" Osterman was asked. "That's show business for you," he answered. "You called out my name—and no applause" . . . Yale's pride, Rudy Vallee, tried to correct Jackie's grammar. "The difference between you and me, Rudy," Jackie apologized, "is that when I went to New Haven, it was to the Shubert Theater there."

OSTERMAN once was signed to entertain at a firemen's ball in Schenectady. The fire chief wanted him to audition, to see how good Jackie was. When Osterman walked out the fire chief asked: "Where are you going?" . . . "To start a fire," he explained. "I want to see how good YOU are."

While he still was at high school, he wrote a song called "We're Glad We've Got You, Mr. Wilson, You Kept Us Out of War." George M. Cohan published it . . . Four weeks later Cohan phoned and said: "That song you wrote is lousy" . . . "G'wan, it's marvelous," Osterman insisted. "Everybody's playing it" . . . "It's lousy," Cohan repeated. "Take a look at the paper. America just declared war."

The Roadside Opens With a Slam-Bang Hit

'Pioneer's Daughter' Keeps Audience in Continuous Uproar

By Nelson B. Bell

"THE PIONEER'S DAUGHTER, OR THE PERILS OF THE PRAIRIE." The Roadside Theater presents a frontier melodrama in three acts and 12 scenes; revised and adapted by Richard P. Creyke. Directed by Ralph Fowler. Settings by Alan L. Ferry; costumes by Dorothy Croissant.

Emigrants, Coyotes, Indians: Charles V. Shoemaker, jr., Joel Marston, H. Harland Crowell, Leonard A. Wilson, Geoffrey Creyke, jr., Don Rush, Herman Spilker, Sherman Lee, Wallace Buell.

Never before in its history has the Roadside Theater put on such a rip-snortin', rootin'-tootin', wild and woolly melodrama of the Old West as "The Pioneer's Daughter," with which its sixth consecutive season was inaugurated last night in the "old red barn," out on the Rockville pike beyond Bethesda.

Take all of the "bad man"-Indian-villainy business out of "The Oklahoma Kid," "Stagecoach," "Dodge City" and "Union Pacific" and roll it into one and you only have the half of it. There are the Coyotes, a band of desperadoes; Black Eagle and his redskin braves; the pioneer and his faithful henchmen; the handsome young woodsman hero, the persecuted heroine, the United States Army and a few comic characters for necessary relief, all tossed into a blood-and-thunder melee that would chill you to the marrow if it were not played in a key that sounds a note of hilarity instead of hair-raising suspense.

First the Coyotes kill off all of the braves but Black Eagle, the lone chief, which puts him on the side of the white man's law and order. Then they attack the settlement, during the absence of its defenders on a prospecting trip, and abduct Minnie Cottrell, "the pioneer's daughter;" Austin Fynes, "a true guide and noble man;" Bridget O'Neill, "a disciple of woman's rights"—as expressed with a mop handle—and Patrick, "her henpecked husband." Then the fun really begins!

Who'll Get the Gal?

The puzzle from this point on is who is going to marry Minnie Cottrell? The Coyote chieftains have aspirations in that direction, so has young Mr. Fynes and there are one or two others who would not be averse. It all winds up in a fatal duel between Dan Devine, renegade, and Sam Budgett, his decoy guide, the nick-of-time arrival of the Army, led to the spot by Fynes and Col. William Cottrell, the pioneer, and the undoing of the forces of evil.

This is all pretty hazy, but so is the plot of the play a good deal of the time. It is such a plot, however, as gives an audience a fine workout with its booing, hissing, cheering and shouted advice to the principals. If you didn't hear all that commotion out at the Roadside last night, it must have been because the wind was in the wrong direction!

The cast was letter perfect for its opening night and put on a great show. Not taking the piece seriously and interpreting it as semi-burlesque they turned in one of the most riotous evenings the Roadside ever has enjoyed.

Several "Stars" in Cast

Foremost among the long roster of players were Betty Brunstetter, admirably cast in the title role; Paul Messink, as Dan Devine; Milton Freedman, as the dastardly Budgett, and Larry Lawrence, as the heroic Fynes. They played the thing up to the hilt—literally in some of the stabbing scenes. The top comedy performance was contributed by Theodore Tiller 2nd, in the role of the phrenologist, who finally becomes important to the action. Mr. Tiller bounced around the stage in fine fashion. More laughs were evoked by Natalie H. Core, as Bridget, who also sang that classic song, "Who Threw the Overalls in Mrs. Murphy's Chowder?" The "Prairie Spirit" was nicely done by Catherine Knockey. Geoffrey Creyke, jr., also delivered himself of a song, "The Ballad of Peter Gray," to nice effect. The others did their full share.

The settings and costumes are the last word in Roadside achievement to date. Betty Gray, at the piano, accords the whole merry business effective accompaniment—not to mention her leading of the between-scenes community yelling.

If the Roadsiders can maintain last night's pace they will have a banner year. But where will they find another "The Pioneer's Daughter?" It must be the only one of its kind ever written—and you'll love it!

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 12.—Jimmy Stewart, the lad every company wants to borrow, has been promised to Jack Warner by M.-G.-M. for "It All Came True." This is a charming story laid in the New York of the nineties with songs of the period and customs of that glamorous age. Speaking of glamour, the "Oomph" gal, Ann Sheridan, plays opposite Jimmy, with Humphrey Bogart in the role of a gentleman who is none too scrupulous.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Edmund Goulding, who is in New York, was paged by long distance telephone to direct the Bromfield Saga. Warners own the Witmark Music Co., and among the old-time numbers they will revive are "Sidewalks of New York," "She Was Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage," "Tell Them That You Saw Me and I Was Looking Well," "My Mother Was a Lady" and "The Band Plays On."

Nate Blumberg, Universal's president, believes the customer is always right, the customer in this case being the exhibitor. When he was elected, he sent out a letter asking what the theater owners would like to see. Their first request was for a sequel to "Three Smart Girls" which was promptly made. The second demand was for another "Invisible Man." Now that little matter is being attended to—not with a remake, if you please, but with a sequel to H. G. Wells widely read story. Sir Cedric Hardwicke has already been signed to play the villain with Joe May, the European director megaphoning in July.

You will see no more stories of Nazi cruelty on the screen for the reason the producers have decided the best way to fight a subject is to approach it in a quieter, less turbulent mood. The public apparently doesn't want this type of movie so Warners themselves, it is rumored, are postponing "Underground" and "The Bishop Who Walked With God" as well as "Boycott," with Lya Lys and Alan Hale. The Hays office has likewise persuaded producers that the public wants entertainment and not propaganda. I am sure the biggest surprise in Hollywood is the failure of the theatergoers to show a preference for "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," which I would have believed would make millions.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Robert Livingstone (the Lone Ranger and brother of Addison Randall) and his wife, will make a decision before the week is ended; Binnie Barnes is wearing the biggest ring in Hollywood—an amethyst that almost covers her hand; when Rosalind Russell and Mae Sundzy arrived at the Romanoff party they curtsied to the psuedo prince. A picket stood outside the Romanoff soiree with a placard reading "Unfair to Real Nobility." Mike left early—said he was tired, but of course that's royal prerogative to depart before your guests; June Lang and Brian Aherne, the town's most surprising combination, dining tete-a-tete at Marcel's; Richard Greene was well enough to leave the hospital today; Bill Lundegan celebrated his birthday with a dinner of spaghetti and such good raviolis in a Santa Barbara Italian restaurant.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 12.—The dog days haven't reached us yet but we've got the silly-dillies. The press is haunting "The Women" set daily, all a-twitter for the blow-off. Because how can you have Norma Shearer, Roz Russell, Joan Crawford, Paulette Goddard, Mary Boland, Lucille Watson, Joan Fontaine, Phyllis Povah and a thousand women together without the lid blowing off the top of the kettle?

HOPPER

Now we've got a mad on! What do we find? They're all palsey-walsey. Norma's serving tea, Joan's switching knitting needles from one to another with five men peering at her, without dropping a stitch. Roz tells me she never had more fun. Even when Paulette sat on her hat she didn't care. Heck, it didn't belong to her anyway. Paulette was willing to part with her 10-inch-long fingernails rather than miss the part. What woman could sacrifice more?

And they have the nerve to ask you to keep this dark—it might spoil the mood of the picture. Am I mad?

To calm down, I go to Horror-scope review, featuring our chiller-thrillers and find Frankenstein, Fu Manchu, Dracula and Svengali drinking tea. Think I'll go to Alaska—where men are still men—I hope!

At a recent preview, the crowd hooted when car starter's voice boomed out: "Myrna Loy's car will pick her up at the Troc." "Gosh, is she walking there?" asked a fan. In most places cars are called by number, but here it's always by name.

A friend dined two blocks from the theater so she wouldn't be late for that preview, then drove two miles out of her way to get there. Her car was pointed in the wrong direction.

Gene Raymond has been criticized for grabbing Jeanette away from camera boys. To alter that impression, he stayed, posed with her, until one boy said: "Get them inside quick. We won't have a bulb left for the producer."

While John Howard patiently waited at Troc, his girl friend, Andrea Leeds, got locked in the powder room. A corpenter had to be called in to get her out. Yes, John waited

Donald Crisp shooting from his hip in his night shirt at the mockingbirds, blue jays, everything with wings. So far, the only bull's-eye he's made is his neighbor's piano, across the street. Tut, tut, Donald, don't you know your countrymen shoot only in the grouse season for their own moors? Did you mistake your bedroom for one?

Understand Errol Flynn and Howard Hill are going over to Santa Cruz to shoot boars. Boys, why travel so far? How about pointing your arrows at some of Hollywood's bores first?

Our highly publicized Beverly Hills is certainly going to have a black mark against it, if they allow those 200 high school honor students, who will arrive here on the seventeenth and stay until the twenty-third for the national speech tournament finals, to sleep on army cots in the high school gym. They come from every State in the Union. Food and entertainment have been taken care of. But so far, Beverly Hills hasn't offered them a place to sleep.

If Rochester didn't steal the picture, "Man About Town," from Jack Benny, he gave him what I'd call a close shave. They were both swell. The picture is beautifully mounted and Edith Head's costumes superb. Would have liked more of Binne Barnes, Isabel Jeans and Eddie Arnold. The little Betty Grable had to do, she did charmingly.

Deanna Durbin's first love won't be Charles Boyer. He's being reserved for a more mature emotion than "first love." But Deanna had a longing look in her eye at lunch. Boyer got more attention than her food. Yes, Joe Pasternak and Henry Koster are on the job and a good one they do with her, too.

PATRICIA MORISON

hailed by Paramount as "the brunette with the blonde personality," whose stock took a leap after her performance in "Persons In Hiding." Stardom is ahead of her

Cross Roads

It has entered its second week.

"Abie's Irish Rose," that is, the Cross Roads Theater's first offering of the summer season.

The phenomenally successful comedy by Anne Nichols was chosen by the straw-hat group over in Virginia as its curtain raiser for the summer and has managed to hold to its reputation as a record-breaker, for the first week at Baileys Cross Roads this year has doubled the business of last season's first week.

Players familiar to the local amateur scene appear in the "epic" roles. Peggy Johnston is the Rose and Don Sisler is her Abie in the tale of how love came to the young couple who married across the river from New York, so their widower fathers would not be shocked at the union of the unorthodox offspring of two very orthodox families. Ted Field is Father Whalen and Bob Langley, the Irish father. Ruth May, Lewis Brott, Edmund J. Evans and Charles Hohein complete the cast.

Howard Wentworth has directed the company and last week's audiences found much that was laugh-provoking in the time-honored lines of the comedy that now is approaching its second generation.

Plays Gridder

Gordon "Bull" Jones, star guard on the U. C. L. A. football team of a few years ago, fulfilled a lifelong ambition in "Invitation to Happiness." He got to score a touchdown, playing the role of "Dutch" Arnold, pro-grid star.

THE WASHINGTON POST MARCH

JUNE marks two anniversaries for The Washington Post.

It was fifty years ago, June 15, 1889, that Sousa's rising baton called forth from the Marine Band the first strains of his newest composition, "The Washington Post March." Written in honor of the then publishers of The Post, and played in public for the first time on the occasion of awards being presented by The Post to amateur authors, "The Washington Post March" became one of Sousa's most popular, most widely played compositions.

It was six years ago, June 13, 1933, that the front page of The Washington Post announced the identity of its new publisher, Eugene Meyer, with a statement from him pledging to "steadily improve The Post and make it an even better paper than it has been in the past."

It was a happy coincidence that made these two events come on so nearly the same date, for the history of the paper during these past six years has been indeed a Washington Post march. The Post has gone steadily forward, improving the editorial product, expanding its news content, gaining in national reputation and local esteem, shattering records in circulation and advertising growth.

The word "march" is a fitting label for The Post's progress. The Post in the last six years has again demonstrated its right to such a noble theme song as the one Sousa wrote for its publishers fifty years ago, and confidently expects to continue this justification of the spirit of "The Washington Post March" for many years to come.

Extraordinary Interest

Some members of the House District Committee are indicating an extraordinary interest in the transcript of certain dictaphone records made by the police during the milk investigation. If the public had not previously suspected that these records are somewhat sensational, it could scarcely avoid that conclusion now. The milk investigating sub-committee's effort to obtain a corner on all copies of the records, with the apparent intention of destroying them, gives incentive to believe all sorts of rumors.

No doubt the committee has full control over these documents, since they were made by police assigned to aid the sub-committee investigating the District's milk supply. But it is both customary and proper for the police to retain records of their own findings. Indeed, that practice is essential to protect the police against misstatement or charges that might grow out of their activities. So the sub-committee ought to move with care in trying to wrest from the police every copy of these documents.

The sub-committee already has copies of the data in question. What purpose could be served by forcing the police to surrender duplicate copies in their files? Should the committee attempt such an extreme measure, it would only give rise to suspicion that its members wish to destroy damaging evidence.

To say the least, that would be strange conduct for a Congressional sub-committee organized for the purpose of throwing light upon a problem of the District of Columbia. Efforts to conceal the conduct of public officials from the citizens whom they are supposed to serve usually provoke a greater storm, in a democracy, then a candid facing of facts.

Before the milk investigating sub-committee adopts the course of trying to destroy police records, part of which have already been presented to the grand jury by the District Attorney, it would do well to consider this aspect of the matter.

Marked For Destruction

It would be enlightening to have representatives of the Senate and House Appropriation committees explain what they intend to do with the National Training School for Girls. As it went to conference, the District supply bill gives the impression that legislators in control of the District's purse strings plan to destroy this reform school without setting up any institution to take its place. Even if that is not their intention, it may be the effect of the slashes to which the budget for the school has been subjected.

For the current year the Training School for Girls was allowed $33,000 for salaries. The House cut that sum to $23,860 and another $3,000 slice was taken off in the Senate. That means the institution must trim its staff from 27 to about 20 persons and reclassify many positions to the lowest civil service grade. Its only two parole officers will have to go, thus tending to increase rather than diminish the ultimate expense of caring for delinquent girls. There will be grave danger of losing the institution's teachers, since their salaries will have to be reclassified.

These losses, however, are only one horn of the dilemma confronting the National Training School. Both houses of Congress have accepted a provision limiting expenditures of the school to "an average per capita of $500 per annum." The per capita cost this year will amount to about $750. A few years ago, when a relatively small number of girls were accommodated at the institution, its expenses were as high as $2,500 per inmate. Because of fixed overhead costs, the outlay per capita rapidly mounts as commitments to the school decline.

Experience has shown that when the Training School offers inadequate care and training the Juvenile Court is reluctant to send delinquent girls there. So the lower appropriation may bring about a substantial reduction in the number of girls at the school, and, if so, it will be impossible to operate the institution under the $500 limitation.

Could this possibly be the intention of Congress? Or have both houses slashed this item in the local budget in an irresponsible manner without knowing the facts? In minor degree the problem of the Training School could be eased by approval of the House bill on this point. But even that would not remove the crippling amendment which threatens the institution with disaster.

If Congress had deliberately set out to emphasize the desirability of granting control over such local institutions to the municipal government, it could scarcely have made out a better case for that urgent reform.

A Blow To Housing

The public, as well as organized labor and the building industry, has more than a passing interest in the local carpenters' strike. That interest is not confined to the delay which may ensue in the completion of numerous building projects. The strike is closely related to the future of residential construction here and may therefore vitally affect the pocketbooks of both homeowners and renters.

Residential building is not immediately involved because virtually all of this work is done by nonunion men. Ten years ago a large part of the residential as well as commercial building in Washington was done by contractors using union labor. The larger construction companies, represented by the Master Builders Association, have now almost completely withdrawn from the home-building field. They are said to be eager to take up residential construction once more. But the competition of builders using nonunion labor at lower wages puts them at a severe disadvantage.

At present the large construction companies are doing mostly Government work. On new Government projects they offered to meet the union's demand for an increase from $12 to $13 for an 8-hour day. But they refuse to make the same concession on private commercial jobs because of fear that contractors using nonunion labor will also take over this field if union carpenters' wages are pushed higher than at present. There is good reason to entertain such fears, aside from the consideration that no scheme boosting wages for public works alone could be permitted to stand.

It is curious that organized carpenters should be demanding wages which threaten further to narrow the field of their employment. Even the present wage of $12 per day is high enough to keep union carpenters out of residential construction. A further increase would only postpone the day when major companies employing union men can undertake home building on a large scale.

If the carpenters were demanding more assurance of work than they now have, or an annual wage guarantee, their cause would attract a great deal of public support. This country ought to have a stable housing industry, affording steady employment at good wages. In pressing demands for excessive hourly rates of pay, however, the carpenters' union is moving away from that desirable objective.

Organized labor has a keen interest in better housing, for a large proportion of working men now occupy undesirable or inadequate living quarters. Labor leaders ought to realize that men earning 40 or 50 cents an hour will never be able to live in houses constructed by carpenters earning three or four times those rates. Even with building-trade wages at their present level (and they are lower in most cities than in Washington) it has been difficult to revive the residential construction industry.

Now tangible progress is being made along that line. Interest rates have been reduced through the FHA and the Home Loan Bank System, and the Department of Justice is attacking alleged monopolies to bring down building-supply prices. It seems particularly short-sighted at this time for the carpenters to be making demands that tend to obstruct the better-housing movement.

Giddy Golf

Of course you might expect almost anything to happen in a place named West Conshohocken, but even the natives there must have been mildly astonished at some of the woozy events which took place in the National Open Golf championship tournament. On his first round, for example, Mr. Lawson Little started with a 39-foot drive from the tee and finished with birdie on a 40-foot putt.

The great champion, Guldahl, was soon out of it and young Byron Nelson, the eventual victor, had all he could do to keep in. Up to the third round it appeared that the title was safe under the belt of the accomplished Sammy Snead. All Mr. Snead had to do was to play a 558-yard hole with a par 5. What with getting in and out of bunkers, he took six strokes to get within 3 feet of the hole and then missed the 3-foot putt. When the round ended with three players tied for the lead Mr. Snead was not one of them.

Having thus disposed of Mr. Snead Lady Luck turned her prankish attentions to Craig Wood, with whom she had such great fun in the British Open and Masters' tournaments. In order to prolong the sport as much as she could, she prevented Mr. Wood from putting himself out of the running, Sunday, with a wildly hooked wood shot. She saw to it that one Bob Mossman should be standing just where he could arrest the flight of the ball with his head and deflect it back to the fairway. (Of course it was tough on Mr. Mossman; they had to take him to a hospital.) Then she let Mr. Wood come as close to the title as Mr. Snead had been. With a one-stroke lead, he had an 8-foot putt remaining—he missed it by 10 inches, and Nelson tied him again.

But even in West Conshohocken, a deadlock can't last forever. Mr. Nelson is now National Open champion. This may or may not prove him the greatest golfer in America. But it certainly proves him a fellow with strong nerves.

The Nazis Disliked It

Because the royal visit to this country had no definite political objective there can be no precise appraisal of its political effect. But the fact that nothing tangible was asked does not mean that nothing tangible has been attained.

Undoubtedly there are many explanations for the tremendous popular reception accorded the British King and Queen during their brief stay in the United States. Simple curiosity of course accounted for a part of the welcome. The unprecedented character of the occasion brought out many whose chief interest may have been the desire to say that "I was there." It would be idle to enumerate the many considerations working in the minds of the millions who enthusiastically cheered these two exalted foreigners.

One may be sure, however, that if it were in character for King George and Queen Elizabeth to seem exalted, or if they had really appeared to the American public as foreigners, their welcome would have been far less spontaneous and sincere. It was the essential democracy of the young couple which appealed most strongly. And closely coupled with that was the feeling that Great Britain, however much her path and that of the United States may diverge, is not really a foreign nation.

What creates that feeling is not the identity of language, nor the joint traditions, nor even the many common interests of the two countries. It is, rather, the fact that Great Britain and the United States have essentially the same ethical code, the same moral standards, the same general sense of what is honorable and what dishonorable in personal, social and international life.

It is this underlying identity which explains the warmth of a reception which the American people would extend to no other foreign potentate, and which English royalty could not expect to receive in any other foreign country. The secondary differences are forgotten, the fundamentals alone are emphasized, when like calls to like.

If anything were needed to make this clear it would be provided by the press comment of a country which today seems really foreign to the Anglo-Saxon and other civilized traditions. In an effort to minimize the general joyousness of the royal visit the official Nazi press has been indulging in lumbering irony of a typically German nature, concentrating on the alleged uncouthness of Americans and sympathizing with the nervous strain the King and Queen must have experienced in our "gangster Eldorado."

In this irritated German reaction may be found at least one important political consequence of last week's events. The Nazi policy is to divide and rule, to take each victim in turn, isolate him and then strike hard. On that list of victims is every country which dares to contest the "living space" theory which Hitler has lately been developing. On that list, at least potentially, are both Great Britain and the United States.

When these two powerful democracies find occasion to pledge each other friendship it is, to Nazi Germany, a most unwelcome development. For the United States and Great Britain to do this with the wealth of good feeling shown during the past few days is particularly annoying. It means that Hitler must recast his thinking, must weigh imponderables of which he has no understanding, must recognize obstacles whose existence he would prefer to deny.

The Nazi press would like to believe that if German planes bombed London the American public would remain indifferent. Therefore it would like to believe that the British King and Queen had a cool reception here. Therefore it reports that "the enthusiasm in Washington was not very great."

Washingtonians are in a good position to judge the accuracy of that reporting. By the same token they are in a good position to understand the motives which prompt such deliberate and calculated deception of the German people.

Things are rarely what they seem. Or, at least, it seems that way.

Whether or not a person will follow advice depends altogether upon how badly he's frightened.

A Senator says Hawaii ought to be brought into the Union. Aren't things shaky enough as it is?

"A dream doesn't last more than five seconds," asserts a psychologist. Say, doctor, didn't you ever hear of the New Deal?

Mrs. Roosevelt says nothing on God's green earth could persuade her to run for the Presidency. Once she got accustomed to it, she might like the White House better than she thinks.

Refugees In America

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There are complaints that the Department of State and the Bureau of Immigration have been admitting refugees to the United States in excess of the established quotas. If those who make these complaints would trouble to check the facts they would find that the quotas are not even exhausted.

For instance, the German quota for 1938 was 27,370, but only 17,199 persons entered this country from Germany and 2,270 persons have departed. This, therefore, would make 12,459 persons less than the quota.

An investigation not yet completed shows that the refugees have established at least 25 new industries. One of these industries employs 3,000 Americans. Dr. Clarence Pickett, of the American Friends Service Committee, one of the many Americans who practice as well as preach Christianity, has stated that the refugees have increased rather than diminished the number of available jobs.

Under the present immigration laws only those refugees can be admitted who have relatives here who can send affidavits promising support. If a prospective immigrant has been convicted in any court of any offense, if he cannot prove he has led a self-supporting, productive and respectable life, that he is not likely to become a public charge, he cannot obtain a visa.

The prospective immigrant has to be registered for at least a year with the American consulate before his application has any chance of being considered under the quota. Immigrants are carefully examined physically and mentally not only at the consulates but also by the immigration authorities when they arrive.

The fees collected last year from these immigrants by the consulates and by the Bureau of Immigration came to the not inconsiderable total of $4,015,068.

These refugees have suffered so greatly that they are better able to understand and to appreciate the blessings of Americanism. They bring with them not only industry, intelligence and skill, but also loyalty and deep gratitude to the American people and the determination to become good and useful citizens. ANNA LANSBURGH.

Long Live Pegler!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Westbrook Pegler rang the bell again with his article on Tom Mooney. That the truth hurts is proved by the hysterical cries of Tom's sentimentalists, who hate to admit that he got a great break in getting out of jail at all, not because he was innocent, but because the American system gives even a Mooney the benefit of the doubt.

Long live Pegler, who isn't afraid to say out loud what everyone is thinking. ADVOCATE.

Afterthoughts On The Royal Visit

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I write to ask why Their Majesties—American and British — circled Mount St. Alban's and did not enter the great Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul wherein the venerable bishop and the canons, in robes of office, awaited them?

Had these rulers of two nations not even a few moments in which to turn away from the glare of human adulation and bow their heads in memory of dead sailor lads still lying deep beneath the coastal waves on both our shores—and to beg God's pity upon all of us—who so sorely need His guidance and His mercy?

I doubt not this question is puzzling many of your readers.

IMOGEN PENN.

Washington, June 10.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It appears to me that attention should be called to the treatment accorded visitors to our great National Cathedral on the afternoon of June 8.

Unaware of any change in program a thousand or more women and children were allowed to broil in the afternoon sun behind ropes as they patiently awaited the appearance of King George and Queen Elizabeth, scheduled to visit the sacred grounds between 3 p. m. and 4 p. m. These visitors were cultured women with a sprinkling of scholarly men.

Common courtesy, as well as the dictates of humanity, should have called forth an explanation and release to the waiting throngs—I consider such disregard inexcusable and humiliating to the visitors, and they were not apprised immediately that the King and Queen had merely driven around the cathedral.

The cathedral grounds were full of custodians of the law, any one of whom could have been delegated to inform the public of the change in program and I hereby register a protest, for the very unnecessary suffering I and others endured.

CHURCHWOMAN.

Washington, June 9.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Entertainment of the King and Queen included the privilege of feasting on hot dogs. The musicale following the state dinner at the White House featured spirituals and hill-billy music, presented by artists carefully and thoughtfully selected for their vote-producing abilities. Nothing was too good for the King and Queen. What a pity a jitterbug contest could not have been arranged for Their Majesties—and a trip to Coney Island!

Shall I believe that all Americans can see no farther than a hot dog, smeared with mustard, as the acme of entertainment, coupled with murder in the name of music? Shall I believe that American culture goes no farther than that? In true regal fashion, Their Majesties were graciously polite in the face of all those provocations.

VISITOR FROM LOS ANGELES.

Washington, June 10.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The slang name "hot dog" for small sausages is at all times vulgar and abominable, but in the case of the King and Queen of England it was outrageous. If Mrs. Roosevelt thinks it is funny she is mistaken.

Washington, June 11.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Self-appointed prophets, critics, etc., have expressed themselves as to the reasons why the beloved King and Queen of England visited our America.

However, no matter how fruitful or fruitless their visit may prove to be, we must admit that nothing less than Divine Providence has afforded this tired, harassed Nation of ours the privilege and opportunity to behold the rulers of the greatest empire on earth, whose devotion and helpfulness to each other was pronounced in their every glance and act.

Our Traffic Troubles

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Wentworth's interesting and original articles on Washington's "Traffic Problem" are at least an approach to a realistic consideration of this harassing subject.

They bring out the self-evident fact that there are more privately owned vehicles in the congested downtown areas than there is space to accommodate them.

Mr. Wentworth points out that each car needs about 160 square feet of space to enable it to get in and out of a parking place. Considering that a private car serves on an average only one or two persons one or two hours a day, the rest of the time standing idle, the enormous wastefulness of individual machinery of transportation becomes apparent. This is merely in terms of space, irrespective of the vast waste of time, money, nervous strain, accidents, etc.

It is a curious example of human fixed habits of thought that all of the proposed remedies for the present intolerable conditions seem to concern themselves with making over our city, at huge public expense, to perpetuate this stupidity.

How much better and simpler to devote public funds to working out an adequate, co-ordinated and therefore economical, system of public transportation and eliminate the "private locomotive" entirely from congested city areas, reserving it for outlying districts where space is not at a premium.

Does anyone know of any other city the size of Washington that still tolerates all-day parking in its business sections? Or in which a motorist could flagrantly violate all ordinances on the subject for 41 days and pay a total fine of $2?

The deplorable proposed "remedies" of overpasses and underpasses, of making streets wider and wider and sacrificing more and more shade trees—which are Washington's only salvation in the summer heat—are wore than useless. No matter how much streets are widened they still have only two curbs and if these are occupied day and night with unused stored cars naturally there will be no room for even brief parking to transact necessary business. In this respect parking meters are at least a step in the right direction.

But all such superficial remedies will be unavailing and our transportation problem will never be solved until there is a prohibition of private vehicles on crowded public streets, and transportation itself—not merely parking lots—is made a public service, municipally owned and operated for service, not for profits.

The present chaotic "every man for himself" state of affairs is as much of an anachronism, and about as intelligent, as it would be to build 12-story office buildings in Washington today without public elevators and have each occupant carry his own ladder downtown and jockey for position to reach his office window. Fruit Of Unemployment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You have had editorials on two or three recent occasions in which you recognized unemployment as a central problem of our time and implied, I think, a diagnosis of the problem as resulting from unlimited or too rapid progress in labor-saving technology.

Personally I think that the future of America and perhaps of the whole world, depends upon our ability to accept that diagnosis and adopt the remedial action which would be indicated as a result of the diagnosis.

I am glad to see every anti-fascist editorial, but fascism and the social attitude of which it is an expression are themselves the flower and fruit of protected wide-spread unemployment G. K.

The Post Impressionist

Pullman Prattle

BACK IN THOSE "dear, dead days beyond recall" (hip-hip hooray!) before air-conditioning was introduced, I breathed enough Pullman lint to upholster a pair of these modern rolling palaces. I have even ridden tourist sleepers which held more lint than the higher-priced ones; and in one end of the car were cooking facilities whence indescribable odors arose as we crept among buttes and joshua cacti and Navaho blanket salesmen across the desert. If you were the kind of person whose attention is attracted by the bouquet of humanity, you had no business in there; and whatever happened to your nose served it right.

But they tell me tourist travel is clean, nowadays, and I don't doubt it. Everything is clean nowadays—even the vaults of the United States Treasury.

There are certain tales of travel that have almost become apocryphal: As an instance, Charley Schwab's porter yarn. A man had been abroad for some years, and when he boarded a westbound train out of New York, he took the porter aside and consulted him as follows:

"George" (he was not a member of the Society for the Prevention of Calling Pullman Porters George), "I've been away from this country for some time and am rusty on customs. What is the average tip you boys now get from an overnight passenger?"

"A dollah," said the porter promptly.

"Well, it seems to have gone up," said the passenger.

Next morning he dutifully handed a dollar to the porter, who immediately began laughing immoderately.

"What's so funny about that, George?"

"Nuffin, boss; cep' you is de onliest man whut has come up to de average in five yeahs."

One time, riding from Gainesville, Tex., to Oklahoma City, I encountered the laziest porter I've ever seen. He had accentuated his natural weariness by imbibing a wicked brand of gin. He was practically useless. I had almost to pull a gun on him to persuade him to carry my suitcase to my bunk.

Next morning I found one of my shoes nicely shined under the edge of my berth. A long search discovered the other one, unpolished, pushed back tightly against the steam pipes at the wall. Calling the porter, I said:

"George, what's eating you! Why didn't you shine both of my shoes?"

"Boss, ah didn't know yall had two shoes."

"What?" I whatted him till you could have heard me in Dallas.

"Honest t'Gawd ah didn't, boss. Dey's a right smaht o' one-legged gentlemen travels on dis line!"

That being one for the book, I let him live.

There is a story so current in Wisconsin it must have had a foundation of truth, though its locale shifts with the teller. But it came first to me that a C., M. & P. train coming in from the west toward Chicago, carried a sleeping car that cut off at Janesville to be taken into Milwaukee on a later train. The porter of the Milwaukee car was lonely, so he took all his car's shoes back to one of the Chicago sleepers which was portered by an old friend of his. They wished to combine business and society.

The train made haste while those sons of the South shone. The Janesville stop and the sleeper-shift were made, while these two smeared and chatted on in blissful ignorance of impending tragedy. But when the porter of the Milwaukee car went to take his armful of footwear back home, he let out a wild wail. He had no more car than a rabbit, and his passengers had no more shoes than ditto.

On arrival at Milwaukee, the story subsequently bobbed up from another source, the wailing passengers (and it was wintertime) were all placed in a bus and taken, sock-footed, to a shoe store where they were refitted with leather at the Pullman Co.'s expense. You have any number of guesses, all exactly alike and all correct, as to whether that porter was disciplined.

There is another somewhat allegorical yarn of the porter to whom a loud voiced passenger complained, early in the morning, that he had been given one tan shoe and one black one instead of a pair alike.

"Dat's sho' funny," said the porter as he scratched his head. "Youall is de secont gentmun what's made dat same complaint dis mawnin', suh!"

There is a custom I have now and then adopted with rather pleasing and signal success: On getting into the sleeper I have taken the porter aside and said confidentially to him, "George, here is a quarter. The reason I give it to you now is that sometimes when I get up in the morning I'm in a terrible frame of mind—have a grouch that is something awful. If that should happen tomorrow morning, I wouldn't give you a thing! So you better take it now, for I really want you to be sure of your tip."

This method is always a surprise to the porter (if I haven't pulled it on him before), and I get absolutely personal valet service for the trip.

Democratic Struggle

By Mark Sullivan

Rival Philosophies

THERE is beginning a struggle for control of the Democratic Party. The period of the struggle will be almost exactly a year, from now until the Democratic National Convention in late June, 1940. The outcome, the decision, will be the Democratic nomination for President. Leaders, or at least symbols, of the struggling factions are President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner.

If we search for indexes of the respective strengths of the two sides, there is one in the Senate. There are in the Senate 69 Democrats. About these an estimate was recently made by persons familiar with the views and habitual standpoints of the 69.

Take, as a type of the thoroughgoing New Deal Senators, those who follow Mr. Roosevelt in practically every matter, Senator Minton, of Indiana. (As respects renominating Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Minton would be in a difficult position, for there is a favorite son candidate from his State, former Gov. Paul V. McNutt. But as respects other matters, and undoubtedly as respects the Presidential nomination if he were free, Senator Minton is the perfect type.) Of Senators of this thorough going New Deal kind, there are more than 18 in the Senate, 18 out of a total Democratic membership of 69.

Thirty In Senate Anti-New Dealers

AS THE CONTRASTING type, take Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia. Of Senators of this type, who frequently oppose the New Deal and would oppose a third term, there are about 30.

The remaining 21 Democratic Senators do not fall readily into either category. It is safe to say most of them are nearer to anti-New Deal than to New Deal.

What is here stated as an estimate based on observations will probably become formal sometime during the coming year. Sometime between now and the Democratic National Convention, someone will introduce in the Senate a resolution saying it is the judgment of that body that the American tradition against a third term should be sustained. That sort of resolution is always introduced whenever there is in office a President who is serving a second term and might seek a third one. The last time such a resolution was introduced was in the latter part of the Coolidge Administration. The vote on the anti-third term resolution, when it comes up shortly, will not necessarily be a clear-cut expression of the respective strengths of the Roosevelt and anti-Roosevelt factions. But this, with other indications, will throw light. And the light will be to the effect that barely a fourth of the Democrats in the Senate would support Mr. Roosevelt for a third term.

The struggle between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Garner as symbols will go on to the end. The struggle may not finally be between these two as candidates for the Presidential nomination. Almost certainly Mr. Garner will be a candidate to the end. But Mr. Roosevelt may not. Indeed Mr. Roosevelt is not a formal candidate now. He is a candidate only in the sense that one of his Cabinet, Secretary of the Interior Ickes, has called for a third term, and some others of Mr. Roosevelt's intimates are maneuvering for one.

But, whether Mr. Roosevelt is a candidate or not, he will be the symbol of the New Deal faction of the party. He will be more than a symbol. He will be the active, aggressive head of the movement that will demand from the national convention complete indorsements of his record, a platform promising continuance of his policies, and a New Deal candidate, whether Mr. Roosevelt himself or another.

Farley Is Key To Situation

WILL MR. ROOSEVELT actually try for the nomination himself? Only by trying, and trying aggressively, can he get it. It will never be handed to him. The persons who run the Democratic organizations in the States, those who manage the show, are not prevailingly for Mr. Roosevelt for a third term. A check of all these would show that the proportion of true New Dealers, of Roosevelt men, is about what it is in the Senate, about one-fourth, perhaps less.

This statement about the Democratic workers throughout the country is subject to a qualification. A large number of these are loyal to National Chairman Farley. If Mr. Farley should say to them, "Boys, it's Roosevelt," many of them would line up. They would demur and say it is unwise, but if Mr. Farley said the word they would go along. Whether Mr. Farley would say the word is the largest current mystery in politics—next to the mystery whether Mr. Roosevelt will ask Mr. Farley to say the word. Mr. Roosevelt will have to ask. Mr. Farley will hardly do it of his own initiative.

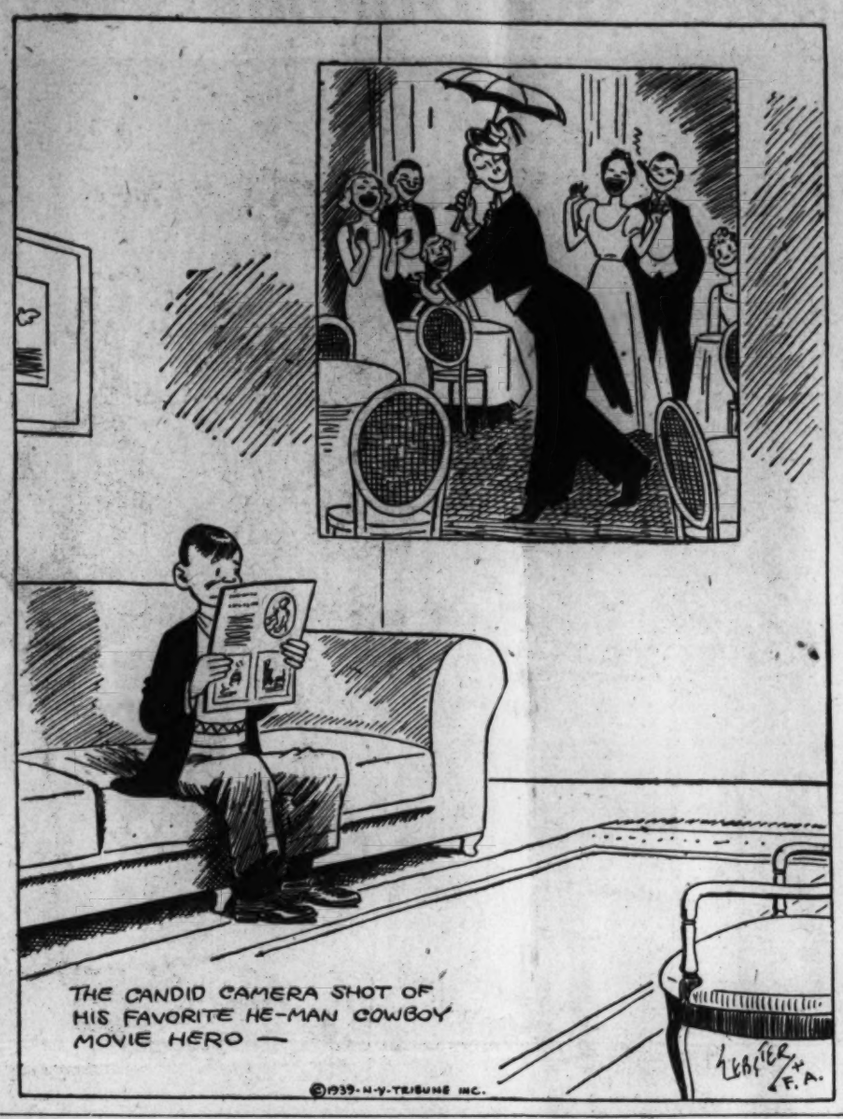
Even with Mr. Farley helping, Mr. Roosevelt would have to fight for the nomination. He would have to go before the Democratic voters and appeal to them. Whether Mr. Roosevelt would like to do that, to run the risk of defeat, of anticlimax to his past great victories—that is a question that will weigh heavily with him.

National to Award Honorary Degrees

The National University Law School will confer four honorary degrees at commencement exercises in Memorial Continental Hall tonight.

Recipients will be Senator Logan, of Kentucky, the commencement speaker; George P. Barse, general counsel to the Controller of the Currency; William Barron Kerkam, president of the American Patent Law Association, and John Clagett Proctor, writer. Degrees will be given 285 graduates.

Life's Darkest Moment



Text of President's Address at West Point

By the Associated Press.

West Point, N. Y., June 12.—The text of President Roosevelt's address today at graduation exercises of the United States Military Academy:

Mr. Superintendent, Fellow Officers:

I take pleasure in greeting you as colleagues in the service of the United States. You will find, as I have, that that service never ends—in the sense that it engages the best of your ability and the best of your imagination in the endless adventure of keeping the United States safe, strong and at peace.

You will find that the technique you acquired can be used in many ways, for the Army of the United States has a record of achievement in peace as well as in war. It is a little-appreciated fact that its constructive activities have saved more lives through its peacetime work and have created more wealth and well-being through its technical operations than it has destroyed during its wars, hard fought and victorious though they have been.

With us the Army does not stand for aggression, domination, or fear. It has become a corps d'elite of highly trained men whose talent is great technical skill, whose training is highly co-operative, and whose capacity is used to defend the country with force when affairs require that force be used.

But it has also been made available to organize, to assist, and to construct, when battles have to be waged against the more impersonal foes of disaster, disease, or distress.

This is sound Army work; for the military strength of a country can be no greater than its internal economic and moral solidarity, and the task of national defense must concern itself with civilian problems at home, quite as much as with armed forces in the field.

The alteration of economic life in the past generation has almost completely changed the task which you assume today. Your predecessors, commissioned second lieutenants as short a time back as ten years ago, would find many of your problems unfamiliar.

Technical Progress Transforms Warfare

Technical developments have transformed methods of warfare. They have required revision of tables of organization of armies, as aviation, motorization and mechanization became the military necessities of the day. The individual fighting plane of yesterday has been supplanted by the cohesive squadron; the motor vehicle rumbles where once trod the weary feet of marching men; the infantry tank and cavalry combat car clatter where formerly the dismounted soldier engaged in personal combat.

The machine age has laid its iron grip upon the world's armies; and technical developments have demanded the modernization of our military establishments, a program which has been prosecuted vigorously during the past six years. During recent months international political considerations have required still greater emphasis upon the vitalization of our defense, for we have had dramatic illustrations of the fate of undefended nations. We seek peace by honorable and pacific conduct of our international relations; but that desire for peace must never be mistaken for weakness.

Yet experts tell us that though technical change has transformed modern warfare, the coming of the machine does not mean that we shall ever have a robot war from which the primary human elements, courage, heroism, intelligence and morale will have departed. So far from submerging men, the modern developments emphasize their responsibilities.

Recent conflicts in Europe, the Far East and Africa bear witness to the fact that the individual soldier remains the controlling factor. The tactics of the future intensify, rather than diminish, the necessity for high qualities of individual leadership. The object of developing aviation, motorization, and mechanization is to attain the highest possible degree of mobility.

Mobility First U. S. Defense Need

For us, this is essential; the vast expanse of territory of a Nation as large as the United States renders economically impracticable the maintenance of fixed defensive installations at all vital strategic centers, even were these desirable as a matter of policy. Yet this greater mobility in turn means that units, whether platoon, regiment, or division, may be widely dispersed—the units being broken down to the point where the individual is "on his own."

During campaigns units are increasingly scattered; in actual battle, they may be widely apart. The strain upon those in command of the individual units calls for qualities of leadership perhaps never before required in military history. Though the day of individual champion may have passed into history, the day of the leader of small and large units is still young.

Leadership has meaning only as it brings about co-operation. When men are working upon a great problem, but must work by themselves, or in small groups without close contact, there is danger that they may not pull in the same direction. Co-operation means discipline, not meticulous though unthinking obedience to guard-room technique, nor blind mass co-operation of a Macedonian phalanx or the close-order attack. Discipline is the tempered working together of many minds and wills, each preserving independent judgment, but all prepared to sink individual differences and egotisms to attain an objective which is accepted and understood. When men are taken far apart by mechanics and specialization, teamwork is far more essential than when they are close together; for it must be teamwork of the mind as well as of the body.

Some of you, no doubt, in the fullness of time, will find yourselves with responsibilities even greater than those of bringing about the co-operation of military units. When the supreme test of war comes—and I hope it never will—an army, to be effective, must command the co-operation of all elements in national life. The men then charged with national defense must be able to bring into harmonious action the civilian instruments of production, and of transport, and of finance; they must deal with labor, with industry, with management, with agriculture, and with costs.

Stresses Value Of Royal Visit

To do this requires sympathetic knowledge of how other men's minds work and of processes by which nonmilitary life operates. There is no greater quality of discipline than the ability to recognize different technique and different processes, and by persuasion and reason to bring these divergent forces into fruitful co-operation.

You have seen the problem in its smaller aspects here at West Point; let me commend to you in your Army careers a continuous study of problems outside as well as inside the military field, as the necessary preparation for the greatest success in your chosen work.

These qualities of co-operation, discipline and the self-restraint and self-reliance which make them useful are the very fabric of modern life. If it can be developed internationally as well as nationally, we shall be materially nearer to a realization of our hopes of peace.

Recently we have had the pleasure of a visit from King George VI, as a courteous recognition of the cordiality and good will which prevails between two great nations. Its significance lay in the fact that friendship could exist between the two countries since both were without fear. To achieve that result, strength is needed; strength which comes, not from arms alone, but from restraint, understanding and co-operation which in turn are the product of trained and disciplined minds.

I am sure the lessons you have learned at West Point will be of use in peace, no less than war; and that in you the Nation will take the same pride, maintain the same confidence, as, through the generations, it has held for the officers of the armies of the United States.

Champagne Toast

LIFTING A glass of champagne in the White House in Washington, the President of the United States faced the King of England and drank a toast to the friendship between this country and the British Empire. Most of us can remember a time when a President could have been impeached for that—not for entertaining the British King in the Presidential palace of the Republic, although that would have been a grave political error at times within the memory of men now living, but for drinking a glass of champagne. And I suggest that the fact that the President may now openly drink an alcoholic beverage without provoking so much as a speech in Congress might teach us that some of our bitterest furies and prejudices are artificial.

Warren Harding was compelled to conceal his toddy behind a book on the shelf and to frequent a little hideaway, and Herbert Hoover, not an abstainer though a Quaker, went up the pole for the term of his Presidency out of fear or respect for a fanatic law which cluttered and in some cases corrupted the courts and made liars and hypocrites of many public men. A dry Congressman, returning from a junket to Cuba, brought his baggage through the customs at Key West under the immunity of his office and became the laughing stock of the country because his trunk sprang a leak. Hard-eyed men with hatred in their hearts haunted Capitol Hill checking the records of Senators and Congressmen on one issue, prohibition, without regard for their attitude on any other problem of the country.

President's Aide Sneaked His Drinks

AGENTS OF the Government shot innocent citizens dead on the mere suspicion that they might be transporting a bottle or case of some miserable hootch distilled in a tin boiler, and a member of the United States Senate was shot in the head by mistake in a pursuit of a bootlegger and died horribly from the effects of his wound.

A secretary of a dry President was afraid to drink in the presence of others even in the home of a friend and sneaked quick ones behind the pantry door, and the cloves consumed in Washington alone in any single week of prohibition was enough to speckle all the hams produced in the State of Virginia from the beginning of time until the date of these presents.

It is almost impossible to believe now that a people so proud of their intelligence and reason ever could have permitted themselves to become so highly inflamed on the question, but, nevertheless, it is true that if any one of the three prohibition Presidents had even touched his lips to a glass of wine or grog in the White House or elsewhere and had permitted that fact to become public a solemn effort would have been made to remove him from office.

Many Believed Law Was Good

YET TODAY Mr. Roosevelt may toast the British King in champagne and a Catholic bishop recently made a gesture of courtesy and amity to the leader of the Ku Klux Klan, and these incidents and the King's visit are sad reminders that people often hate and fight at the instigation of ambitious demons without reasons of their own.

On the issue of prohibition the hatred and malicious cruelty of those who approved poisoning and shooting, raids on people's homes and the law of a life for a pint, was matched by the anger of those who were determined not only to break the law but to destroy it and to humble its supporters. In some sections of the country the stranger reads warnings on the door of his hotel room that the police had the right to let themselves in or chop their way in at any moment to search for liquor and that he might be sent to prison for possessing as little as one drink or even on the raiders' word that they smelled alcohol on his breath. Travelers on the roads were halted by ambuscades and if guilty were arrested or permitted to bribe themselves free, and yet there were great numbers of Americans who thought they believed in this law as a matter of morals and hated as devils all those who broke it and in many cases even those who merely disapproved it.

But there may be hope.

Since those days I have taken refreshments with Herbert Hoover himself, and speaking for myself the beverage was Scotch and soda and Mr. Hoover lifted the check. I never had expected to see the day when Mr. Hoover would take his turn.

Berlin Reaction

The Visit As Seen By The Nazis

AMERICANS are of one mind in the belief that the visit to the United States of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth was a great personal triumph for the royal pair. Everywhere they left a happy impression; everywhere they won golden opinions.

No such agreement obtains, however, as to the political significance, if any, of this unprecedented trip to the land of Washington of the successor to George III. Some insist that the visit will help bring the United States and Great Britain closer together and, in view of the present international situation, may thus prove of momentous importance.

Others argue that the extremely cordial reception given the British monarch and his consort merely underlines the fact that there are very real bonds of sentiment that link the two great English-speaking democracies. But still others insist that the visit will have no lasting significance whatever, since it did not and could not alter the fact that the United States, while friendly to the people of Great Britain and the British dominions, has not the slightest intention of linking its fate to that of the empire over which King George reigns.

SINCE WE ARE dealing with intangibles, it is impossible to say which of these points of view is correct. Yet it is in itself significant that many people do interpret the cordiality and enthusiasm manifested by the people of Washington and New York toward the royal pair as an unmistakable sign of Anglo-American friendship.

Certainly had the situation been different, had the American people shown themselves utterly indifferent or even hostile to the royal visitors, that circumstance would have been blazoned everywhere as proof positive that the relations between Great Britain and the United States were distinctly bad. Such a belief would have had very far-reaching repercussions in Europe and Asia.

IT IS AN INTERESTING fact, therefore, that the German comment on the royal visit is precisely to the effect that it was in every sense of the word a failure; that it was marked by a conspicuous lack of enthusiasm on the part of the American public; that it gave rise to an endless succession of gaucheries and that, in every particular, it missed fire.

The picture is obviously a wholly distorted one. But why did the German press—which means the Nazi government—find it necessary to paint white black in this instance?

The answer is that the Nazi regime interpreted the cordial reception given King George and Queen Elizabeth as a manifestation of Anglo-American friendship which, while without direct political connotation, cannot safely be ignored.

To have told the truth or an approximation of the truth might easily have increased the already serious alarm which Germans entertain regarding the international situation. Instead, therefore, the Nazi authorities felt it necessary to present German readers with what, from the American point of view, is a wholly unrecognizable picture of the actual happenings.

THE FACT is that neither the German leaders nor the German people underestimate the importance of the United States in the international scheme of things. That is why, during recent months, the Nazi press has laid down an unremitting barrage against this Nation and its statesmen.

They know that encirclement talk has its uses. They have been using that kind of propaganda for all it is worth and it has undoubtedly had its effect in persuading many Germans of the wisdom of Hitler's international policy. But the point can be overstressed. With Great Britain, France, Poland, Rumania and Greece already in the antiaggression front and Russia a likely member of that bloc, the admission that Great Britain has the friendship of the United States, even while giving renewed impetus to encirclement talk, might dangerously increase German alarms.

Instead of capitalizing the royal visit as further proof of British machinations against the Third Reich, therefore, the Nazi leaders have sought to minimize it as proof of a British failure to win the friendship of the United States. In so doing they have given themselves away.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

"The Monopoly"

Kiddies may now lick lollypops unmenaced by the awful shadow of the "trust" orgie. They may now buy an ice-cream-on-a-stick without a thought of becoming innocent parties to monopoly.

Yes, Virginia, there was a lollypop-stick trust!

But the Government, ever vigilant and probing upward in the night, has exposed it and terminated it. The monopoly probe labored and brought forth a stick trust.

It seems that Little Willie, holding in his pink hands, a taffy-on-a-stick was unwittingly a symbol of big business; and that even Sister Imogene licking a hunk of chocolate ice cream (with handle attached) was, in a way, contributing to the restraint of trade.

Thurman Arnold and his aides in the United States Department of Justice have cracked down on the stick manufacturers, charging six or seven of them with controlling the business; and the stick-makers, probably as much surprised as anybody else, have capitulated and signed an agreement to cut it out.

So, if you have had some lumber in the backyard and have been thinking of turning out some lollypop sticks in a small way, be no longer hesitant and afraid, Elmer. Go to it. Uncle Sam is behind you.

And (don't gasp, boys) it's a five million a year industry. This must be pretty startling, especially to anybody who has been using his lumber to make hitching posts or things like that.

The department is disappointed by the peaceful settlement of the great lollypop and ice-cream-on-a-stick monopoly issue. It wanted a trial, just for the testimony. Can't you imagine it:

Q.—So you make lollypop sticks, eh?

A (a little ashamed).—Yes, sir.

Q.—How is business?

A.—From hand to mouth.

Q.—Isn't it true that you belong to a trust?

A.—We stick-makers feel that we should stick together or get stuck separately.

Q.—How big a business is this stick-making industry?

A.—Raspberry!

Q.—You are aware of the anti-trust laws, are you not?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And you would let the innocent little kiddies of America become parties to a violation of these laws?

A (very guiltily).—I never thought of it that way.

Q.—It is a fact, is it not, that stix companies of sick manufacturers . . . I beg pardon . . . a fact that stick companies of slick manufacturers. . . .

A.—Are you trying to say six companies of stick manufacturers?

Q.—Yes, and thanks for the help. Is it a fact that six companies of stick manufacturers have controlled the business?

A.—That's your story and I guess we stick-makers are stuck with it.

Nancy Carroll Offers Some Beauty Hints

By Ida Jean Kain

PHOTOGRAPHS LIE every day, and I will admit that on my way to keep my appointment with Nancy Carroll, the thought struck me that the idea was to write about a beauty who had stayed beautiful and could make a few worthwhile suggestions as to how to do it. But what if she hadn't!

Oh, but she has! So I barged right ahead and asked all about her beauty regime. It's all health, diet and exercise, so, of course, I think it's good!

Miss Carroll believes that a good skin depends on what you eat and on your circulation. She favors the old-fashioned combination of plenty of soap and water along with the new fangled notion of facial exercise.

For Eye Exercises

"Eye exercises keep away crowsfeet," she declares, and here is one of her favorites: Place the third and fourth fingers lightly on the upper eyelid and just under the eye. Now, close the eye against the gentle resistance of the fingers. This exercise strengthens the muscles all around the eyes.

To Miss Carroll, keeping young means keeping supple and she has learned a great deal about specific exercise. She doesn't believe in the huff-puff kind because they are tiring without being efficient but she thinks that every movement that is made can be done in such a way that it serves as mild exercise. Whether it's turning the head, bending down to pick up something from the floor or walking, if done correctly, it is good exercise. She likes to play tennis—every day when possible—to swim.

But the thing Nancy Carroll considers most important is happiness.

"I have found that people think you are pretty when you look happy," she told me. "You may have on an awful dress and not be too well groomed, but if you are happy they say you are looking wonderful. And they mean it!"

Women can well think over that thought—worrying and hurrying with a strained look on your face will certainly add years, not to mention crowsfeet!

She Loves to Eat

Nancy Carroll loves to eat and she has a little trouble with her weight. She is only 5 feet 3½ inches tall and describes herself as the rolypoly type—or maybe it's the Floradora influence! She thinks some of the movie stars are a bit bony, but adds hastily "maybe that's just envy!" The facts are that she weighs 120 pounds and has these measurements: Bust, 35 inches; waist, 25 inches; hips, 37 inches—all of which, from a figure expert's standpoint, is perfect.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Drained of Hope as Result of Tragic Life, Woman, 38, Asks Guidance in 'Carrying On'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Feeling that I have exhausted the last dregs of that "hope" which we are taught to believe "springs eternal" in the human breast, and being truly tired of living, I turn to you with my problem, for I greatly admire your judgment. To begin with: at the age of 16, having just graduated from high school, I married to escape a home that held only unhappy memories.

My mother was a fine, cultured only daughter of a retired plantation owner. She married a handsome, shiftless, black sheep son of a well-to-do family, who thought himself too much of a gentleman to work—thereby shifting support of his family, consisting of three children, to the maternal grandfather and widowed, maternal grandmother. This situation became very distasteful to all after a number of years, and caused such friction that both grandparents finally refused to contribute further. My mother then tried to help by teaching French. However, her health was not good and she was compelled to give up.

I was married just seven months when my father, thrown on his own resources at last, showed what a coward he was by murdering members of the household and committing suicide. Several months later my first daughter was born. A few years later, another daughter was born. At the age of 25, my husband died, leaving me practically destitute, as he had been ill for some time before his death. Doctors' bills had accumulated, as well as bills for groceries and medicine. That was 13 years ago.

I went into the business world with no training, since I knew I must succeed, for the sake of the two little girls. I secured a clerical position in a large office, applied myself diligently and studied a secretarial course at night. I finally succeeded in working my way up to the position of private secretary to the highest official of that concern, a man of the finest reputation. I do not think it was humanly possible for anyone to be happier than I was at that promotion. And yet, how the gods must have laughed at my gullibility.

I was like clay in the hands of this man, and despise myself for having become his "office wife" over a period of eight years. His wife, who was an invalid, died two years ago. I had truly learned to love him, and he contends he will never love anyone else, as long as he lives. But he never wishes to remarry. When he informed me that he had no intention of ever remarrying, I revolted against the situation. I admired and respected him, and I know he felt the same toward me. I became so disgusted that I resigned my position and, not being able to find another in the same city, left town. Through friends, he has learned my address and has written several letters, asking me to return—but never mentioning marriage. Knowing him as I do, I know he never will.

I am so heartbroken over the whole affair; so despondent, so embittered, that if it were not for the kindness of friends whom I am now visiting, I do not know how I would carry on. I must secure a position and yet I have no interest. It does not seem to matter whether I even live. I cannot go on. Physicians tell me I am bordering on a nervous breakdown and I do not seem to have the strength or the will to carry on. Is it possible for one of my age to "come out" of such a predicament and start all over again? DESPONDENT.

Source of Vitality

DEAR DESPONDENT: It is the violent conflict within your own breast, between your desire for the unconsecrated comfort of this man's arms, and what you conceive to be your moral duty to resist that emotional enslavement, that has brought you to the verge of a nervous breakdown; that is causing you currently to question the value of living.

In my opinion, you possess an essentially inconquerable spirit; a will to live, the strength and sanity of which can safely be trusted to see you victoriously through all adversity and any mistakes that may temporarily obstruct your progress. From childhood to this present hour, your strength and sanity have so magnificently sustained you through so many recurrent crises—any one of which would have broken a weaker spirit—that these heroic qualities are not to be discredited now, just when they have already carried you more than half way through what is undoubtedly the most cruel test you will ever know.

Indecision (in spite of decisive action) and remorse are, at this moment, the borers-from-within that are sapping your strength. Your psychological attitude and psychic condition at this moment afford a figurative parallel of the behavior of Lot's wife, and of what happened to her in consequence. Having acted on the wisely self-preservative impulse to flee the source of temptation, you are currently failing to keep faith with your conscience and will-to-live, through looking backward in anguished regret upon that occasion of personal demoralization which you rightfully abandoned, after discovering its true nature. In so doing, you are committing a kind of psychic suicide, comparable to the end which Lot's wife invited, despite being forewarned.

It is well for you that your strength was not spent before you found the courage to make the break. It is well, too, that you have already found refuge among sympathetic friends in another city. What you need now, above all else, is (1) a job; and (2) a practicable spiritual philosophy. Your continuous, self-betraying mistake from the very beginning of your bravely adventuring career has consisted, I think, in depending primarily upon your own efforts and those of human collaborators—instead of invoking through faith and prayer, the assistance of that Higher Power, Whose ways and purposes were so clearly explained, and so conclusively demonstrated, by the Great Teacher in Whose name Christianity has been established.

For erasing conflict within the personality, and by way of invoking a personal miracle of spiritual resuscitation, I know of nothing which surpasses an attentive reading of the Gospel According to John. Here is no oppressive adjuration to passive endurance. It is a clarion call, of irresistible import, to the individual to awaken to his infinite possibilities, and to live them to the fullest. Such possibilities are timeless. Age has nothing to do with them. As has been said in the vernacular, "It is never too late to do better." And at approximately 38 years of age, which is the age I assume you to be, you are barely crossing the threshold of your mature phase of life.

Lucius Humphrey has given the world a book entitled, "It Shall Be Done Unto You"—a book which is in my opinion, a masterpiece of helpfulness in mending broken lives and healing bruised spirits. It is remarkable alike for its sound common sense, spiritual insight and inspirational value. I would like you to read it; indeed, to study it; to underline its many self-evident truths as they appeal to you, and to bring them into operation in your own affairs. This book, I am told, has been directly instrumental in bringing increased health, wealth, happiness and vocational success to hundreds of readers, many of whom found in its pages their first practicable, workable understanding of the meaning of Christ's teachings.

The turning point in your affairs will come when your fundamental attitude toward your situation has been changed from one of conclusion, defeat and despair to one of understanding, acceptance and steadfast resolution to profit from its lesson by creating a different situation. And I am confident that the book recommended above will shape your thinking to that end. It is a book which seems to bear out the singularly wise saying that, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Team Cosmetics With Jewelry

Hollywood, Calif. — Teaming costume jewelry with cosmetic colors is a summer suggestion from Ann Sheridan, the "Oomph Girl," of the Warner Bros. picture, "Naughty But Nice." She has pale blue green and lavender choker necklaces made of porcelain which she uses to complement various shades of eyeshadow after dark.

Lipstick and nail lacquer are chosen to match such pieces of jewelry as a rigid bracelet set with amethysts, pink sapphire earrings, a garnet dinner ring, and an exquisite star ruby brooch.

Summery Silk Plaid

The most delicious color combination we have seen in a long time comes to life in the plaids and overplaids of this shirtmaker frock. It features the pale coolness of pink for the pure silk ground—plaided in an almost edible plum color—that overplaided in navy. This combine makes one of those indispensable everlasting wardrobe classics that goes under dark traveling topcoats or stands on its own merits as a hot weather fashion. The cool shawl collar, released bustline pleats, and wide padded shoulders are touches that make this plaided silk flattering even to the woman of slightly larger build

New York, June 12.

I HAVE ASKED that elderly student of culture, Leonard Hall, who resides at my house, to report on the better things of the World's Fair.

Miss Hughes, hard-driving woman of the world, is passionately interested in the artistic and industrial gadgetry now on exhibition at our Fair. Show her a streamlined pickle-fork and she's happy for hours. I, on the other hand, am an elemental person of fundamentally simple tastes, and have been noted for many years as a student and lover of beauty. Thus, leaving the little woman happy with her world of tomorrow, I have devoted six stern hours to the beauty of today.

Perhaps this won't interest you, so just hand the paper over to Mister. I have a feeling that he, too, loves beauty. We all remember how, last winter, the Fair's poobahs were very holier-than-thou about their show, announcing snootily that there would be no Sally Rand-ish didoes at their serious-minded Fair. Well, they either forgot or got smart, for I have never seen so many acres of warm pink epidermis in all my born days, and I was a professional drama critic for years, studying the culture of "Follies" and "Passing Shows" and things.

I began my educational tour with Mr. Billy Rose's water show, "The Aquacade," and found it the most beautiful thing of its kind ever produced. All Rose's other shows were mere warm-ups for this. The precision-swimming by the girls and boys, the work of cunning Eleanor Holm and some big hairy bloke named Weismuller (probably the girls go for him), the thrilling dives and even the water comedy are simply terrific. I never saw an amusement buy to touch the Aquacade. A glorious show from comfortable seats at a very modest fee. Can't beat it.

Carrying my notebook, pencil and field glasses, I hurried to attend the beauty clinic called "The Congress of Beauty," operated by old Prof. Nils Granlund, the Scandinavian scholar. The professor has a large group of astonishingly young and pretty children in his class. In this group of clinical cases are such headlinres as Miss Faith Bacon, warmly clad in blonde hair and girlish purity. She does a "fawn dance," but there is no fawn. Miss Bacon's art consists of a protracted death from an arrow fired by an invisible hunter. Even more striking is the art of Miss Della Carroll, another tow-head, who does a rose dance. She starts her performance wearing about eight tearoses, and completes it without even a petal. Very interesting.

Picnic Preparedness

The summer picnic is not to be suppressed! That comforting assurance to nature lovers was given yesterday by Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, celebrated reformer, at her weekly press conference.

Mrs. De Goofey

Reports that the intrepid founder and president of the Do Something About It League had the summer picnic next on her purge list were denied by Mrs. DeGoofey.

"Indeed I am out to preserve the picnic rather than to destroy it," she said. "I understand there is a great deal of sentiment developing against picnics among some members of our better element, and I fear that if something is not done at once to improve and modernize the picnic, this great American institution will pass. Now one of the first things I want to do is to make picnics more exclusive. In other words, to limit the guest lists."

"Will you choose guests on the basis of their official or social standing?" asked a society editor.

"Neither! I shall merely deny picnic privileges to certain types of habitual picnickers. Among those I have already placed on my blacklist are the following: Camera fiends of all kinds, including especially, candid camera operators; all athletic men and boys who want to get up impromptu ball games; all exhibitionistic women and girls who want to go wading; all recently engaged and all nearly engaged couples (let them mush in the porch swing at home); all amateur botanists who insist on telling you the scientific names of the flora; all women who quote Wordsworth.

Four-Legged Addicts To Be Barred

"In addition, I hope to ban a lot of other regular picnic goers, including all ants, flies, gnats, mosquitoes, chiggers, caterpillars, worms, et cetera."

"What social pressure will you put on the latter, Mrs. DeGoofey, to induce them to eschew picnics?" asked an editorial writer.

"None. I shall simply shut them out of the new nuisance proof picnic booth I have devised. This booth, which is collapsible, and made of mosquito netting may be carried by picnickers and set up wherever they may desire to eat in the open. It has a chigger-proof oilskin carpet and a rain-proof cellophane top. When special privacy is desired from other picnickers a few feet away collapsible oilskin screens may be set up. Now in one of these cozy booths picnickers may find themselves almost as comfortable as they would be at home.

"What about picnic costumes, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a fashion writer.

"I am glad you asked about that. I think that much of the dissatisfaction with picnics in the past has been that the picnickers were not properly garbed and equipped for such expeditions. Now I have devised a very fetching costume of mosquito netting. The model for women is darling, shirred at the shoulders and with a ballet skirt effect over pantalettes gathered at the ankles. The men's costume is cut on the order of slacks. Both type of costumes have hoods that cover the face. With these will be worn heavy leather boots. Then each picnicker will carry a spray gun full of disinfectant to fight off vermin and minor insects."

No Squashy Eggs Or Sandwiches

"What about the picnic food, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a radio homemaker. "And what is your stand on fried chicken?"

"Fried chicken is my preferred picnic food provided it is cut at the joints. In fact I intend soon to start a crusade against the serving anywhere of that ubiquitous nuisance, the half-fried chicken presented en masse. But to return to the picnic lunch, let me say that I expect to do something drastic against deviled eggs that have been mixed with the best juice; against sandwiches that look as if they had been sat upon; against peach pickles, especially if they are made from cling peaches; against Aunt Nannie's homemade jelly that someone keeps passing you when you are struggling with your sandwich, chicken wing, and ice tea; against the mixed aroma of banana and sour pickles that is the aftermath of a picnic feast; against the inevitable shortage of forks and paper cups, and against the public eating of ice cream cones."

"Does that complete your picnic rehabilitation program, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a church editor.

Cleanly Habits Helps Child Adjust

According to phychologists and authorities in child welfare, self-adjustment is simplified for the child who establishes cleanliness habits early.

"Many clinical cases of maladjustment are associated with lack of cleanliness," says J. Mace Andress, Ph. D., associate editor of Hygeia. "It would be difficult to prove that uncleanly habits alone are responsible for serious maladjustments, but there is enough evidence to show that they are contributing factors. They offer a promising field for research, but it is not necessary to wait for a more scientific collection of facts to realize the importance of teaching cleanliness to promote mental health."

Sauce Tartare Lends Piquancy To Sea Dishes

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor

A FRESH NEW COLLAR can do a lot for an old dress. Sauces are equally adept at lending fresh interest and sophistication to our foods. Hollandaise with broccoli, horseradish sauce with beef, and tartare sauce with scallops all give accent. Such highly seasoned sauces will lend interest to familiar foods. Sauce tartare is splendid to serve with broiled or fried fish or shell fish, and is almost required as an accompaniment to fried scallops.

Sauce Tartare

Mix ½ cup mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon chopped sweet or sour pickles, 1 tablespoon chopped olives, stuffed or plain, 1 tablespoon minced parsley, 1 tablespoon minced onion, 1 tablespoon capers, and 1 tablespoon tarragon vinegar.

This dressing does not improve on standing, so it is a good plan to add the various vegetables and seasonings to the mayonnaise just before serving. You can have them all prepared and measured out and mixed together in a bowl, leaving only the actual adding of them to the mayonnaise at the last minute.

New Slip Ideas

The smartest modern slips have taken on new slants and are cut with straight fronts and bias backs for ease of action. They are made of crisp rayon taffetas in such shades as young green, blue, dust rose and cyclamen to match a veil or other accessory in the new spring costume suit. There also are satin slips with camisole tops.

Capital Society Turns To Summer Activities

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

CHEVY CHASE CLUB at luncheon time and on through the afternoon was THE place to be yesterday when a typical June sun beat down on Washington. While other parts of the city sizzled, breezes blew their best on the veranda of the clubhouse with its superb view of a cool, rolling greensward. And upstairs, where luncheon was served on the sunporch, you could imagine yourself enjoying vacation days at a mountain resort.

As would be expected, luncheon, swimming and bridge parties were very much the order of the day, as Capitalites who before now have been concerned with formal entertaining turned to small, hastily-arranged get-togethers of the type that usually enliven Washington' summer social calendar.

Among those entertaining was Mrs. Henry D. Flood, who had as ranking guests at her luncheon Mrs. William E. Borah and Mrs. Charles L. McNary. The hostess' daughter, Miss Eleanor Flood, welcomed the company with her mother and then slipped off to join some of her friends.

Mrs. Ralph Worthington, who is building a house at her Virginia place and left shortly after the party for a quick trip out to see how the work is progressing, was in the company, which also included Mrs. Harry Grant Meem, who will be off soon to join her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Beale McLean, jr., in Colorado; Mrs. Carlos del Mar and Countess Cassini.

MRS. HALBERT SLOAT, of Rio de Janeiro, who recently arrived in Washington for an extended visit with her sister, Mrs. Julius A. Furer, was guest of honor at a large luncheon given by Mrs. Furer.

The round table was located about the center of the sun porch and was decked with a big bouquet of pink and blue larkspur.

Guests invited to meet Mrs. Sloat were Mme. Araujo, wife of the Naval Attache of the Brazilian Embassy; Mme. Meijer Ranneft, wife of the Naval Attache of the Netherlands Legation; Mrs. James Ackerson, Mrs. Frank Chambers, Mrs. Donald C. Bingham, Mrs. Garland Fulton, Mrs. Henry Williams, Mrs. Fairfax Leary, Mrs. William Flather, Mrs. Fernando Cuniberti and Mrs. Lewis Atkins.

SEVERAL SMALLER parties also were noted. Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge and Mrs. Hamilton Fish had with them a trio of youngsters, their own sons and a friend, who were enjoying the swimming pool no end.

Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner was in a small luncheon group that included Mrs. Kenna Elkins and Mrs. Malcolm S. McConihe. Capt. and Mrs. Enrique A. Prieto were seen across the room in a luncheon threesome.

Mrs. Royal T. McKenna had a company of eight at her table and nearby another luncheon group had in it Mrs. William A. Morgan and her mother, Mrs. Ogilvie Shumate; Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. Walter Distler and one or two others.

Mrs. Morgan, incidentally, is planning a trip to Europe this summer. Accompanied by Mrs. Melville Bell Grosvenor, she will leave the latter part of July for a Mediterranean cruise with an extended stopover in Italy, and will go from there to Paris before returning early in September.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Mrs. Alan G. Kirk, who is now in New York, will sail tomorrow for London to join her husband, Capt. Kirk, who is Naval Attache of our Embassy there. Their daughters, the Misses Marion and Deborah Kirk, will be here until the latter part of this week and then will go to their summer home in Connecticut to spend a few days before sailing June 28 to join their parents . . . Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Culbertson and their three daughters, the Misses Junia, Jane and Josephine Culbertson, are now in New York. Mr. and Mrs. Culbertson will sail tomorrow for Copenhagen, where Mr. Culbertson will address the International Chamber of Commerce. The girls will remain in New York until Friday, going then to the Culbertson summer home near Waynesboro, Pa., to spend the season . . . Capt. and Mrs. John Henry Gibbons, who returned from Florida the end of April, left yesterday for Deercliff, their summer home near Avon, Conn. . . . the Netherlands Minister and Mme. Loudon will be off Thursday for New Bedford, Mass., where they will be through the summer.

Charles Hurds To Be Guests of Mrs. Hawes Dunn

Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Hurd, of Georgetown, and their house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur T. Thompson, of Des Moines, Iowa, will be guests Mrs. Hawes Dunn, Stratford, Va., this week-end.

On Saturday, the Thompsons were guests of honor at a cocktail party given by Mr. and Mrs. Hurd and were later feted by the same hosts at a supper party.

Among those attending one or the other event were Mrs. Francis Parkinson Keyes, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn Waltman, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Watson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf Walling, Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Herrick, Mrs. Bruce Branson, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Oxley, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph McElhenny, Miss Virginia Price, Jack Hayes, William McComb, Eddie Roddan and Gerard Reilly.

Beverly Thomases On Wedding Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Beverly Mattson Thomas, whose marriage took place on Saturday, are now on a brief wedding trip. After June 18, they will be at home at 4402 Jenifer street.

Opening night at the Roadside Theater last evening found many of the Congressional set on hand.

In the party of Kenneth Romney, sergeant at arms of the House, and Mrs. Romney, were Representative Claude V. Parsons and Representative and Mrs. Harry Englebright. Few Parties Left to Brighten Social Scene With King and Queen Gone and Summer Come PRACTICALLY ANYTHING would seem an anti-climax after last week's entertaining for the King and Queen, and a big slump is already noticeable in Washington social life. The postman seems to have stopped delivering enormous engraved invitations, and practically the only big parties left to look forward to are Miss Patricia Hurley's debut on Saturday afternoon; the subscription dance that evening at the 1925 F Street Club, and the festivities in honor of Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Marta of Norway, due here the end of the month.

Half of society left immediately after the British garden party for cooler spots, and the other half is ready to evacuate Washington. Here are some of the plans people are making:

FORMER SENATOR and Mrs. Hiram Bingham left by motor yesterday for Old Lyme, Conn., where they have leased a large home for the summer. The woods up there are full of Binghams, as several of the seven sons of Mr. Bingham have summer places nearby. Lyme is only a few miles away from Fenwick, where Katharine Hepburn is building a large summer home to replace that of her family, which was completely destroyed in last autumn's hurricane.

Other Washingtonians in the vicinity will be Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, who has bought an old house in Essex, and Mrs. Pearsons Rust, who will leave about June 27 to visit her. Mrs. Thaw has already departed.

Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss will retire to the Homestead in Hot Springs, Va., where she will be until August, when she will return to Washington . . . Mrs. Mondell Gregg is looking forward to a summer in Montana and Wyoming, and if she doesn't get sidetracked by the charms of life on a ranch, will continue on to California. The West Coast, incidentally, seems to be the destination of every other member of Capital society.

MRS. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt expects to go to Skaneateles, in upper New York State, where she has a beautiful old home. Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, her next door neighbor here, will pay her a visit . . . Countess de Gramont leaves today to try out Marion, Mass., on Cape Cod, and if she likes it will take a house there . . . Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover is off today for Nonquitt, Mass. . . . Mrs. Moulton Johnson has left for her summer home at Jamestown, R. I., and stopped en route for a visit in New York with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Emmons. Her other daughter, Miss Belle Johnson, will leave here June 30 for Jamestown . . . Miss Dorothea Villard will give up her job and attractive Georgetown apartment in mid-July and will spend the rest of the summer with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Garrison Villard, at their country home in Connecticut.

Commander and Mrs. William D. Brereton sail in mid-July for Buenos Aires, where the former will be Naval Attache at our Embassy. Their attractive daughter, Miss Nancy Brereton, will spend two weeks at Easthampton, Long Island, before embarking with them. Mr. and Mrs. William Beverly Mason also have taken a house at Easthampton.

Mary Louise Marsh and her uncle, Edward Gardner, are considering Narragansett, where they spent last summer . . . In fact, it begins to look as though shortly there would be "absolutely nobody" in town again.

HOWEVER, a few small, informal parties still dot the social calendar. Senora de Martins, wife of the Brazilian envoy, has asked friends for tea this afternoon, and William McComb will give a garden party tomorrow afternoon for Miss Alice Tuckerman and her fiance, Capt. Robert Williams.

FINAL NOTES on the royal visit: If you want to see an exhibition of well-bred scrambling, shoving and pushing, watch the newsreels of the British Embassy garden party, as social leaders elbow their way for a view of the King and Queen. Particularly intriguing is the popeyed expression of interest on the face of one guest, hitherto noted for his blase, world-weary look says "Mary Annette," Decorating Hostess of The Hecht Co.

Our Early American forefathers took life seriously and felt that stout hearts called for straight backs as well. As evidence we have but to look at these two early American chairs, built not for loungers, but doers of things. And while I'm sure their design was inspired by noble motives, they nevertheless are decorative as well, and are a decided asset in any Colonial or Early American room. And what is more . . . they're comfortable, providing real support for the back and comfortable, well-placed arm-rests. The ladder-back chair has a straight rush seat and the Comb-Back Windsor a saddle-shapped wood seat. Either may be had in walnut, or mahogany veneers on gumwood, or in solid maple.

Consult "Mary Annette" or any of our staff of Decorators, at any time, without any obligation or charge whatsoever. If you prefer an appointment, call NAtional 5100, Branch 500. If your question can be answered by mail, write us a letter and you will be answered promptly.

President Speaks At West Point

President and Mrs. Roosevelt arrived their car was driven directly onto the rear of the platform.

Traffic on the highway from Bear Mountain Bridge and through the military reservation was stopped at 11 a. m. At 11:40 the Presidential party was met at the gate by the superintendent of the Academy and the 21-gun Presidential salute boomed over the post.

Stresses Army's Peace Value

President Roosevelt was greeted by the official "ruffles," "Hail to the Chief" and "The Star-Spangled Banner" played by the West Point Band.

Following a short invocation by Chaplain H. Fairfield Butt 3d, the President spoke to a most attentive audience. The entire corps of Cadets leaned forward to catch every word of his address.

To the graduates he stressed that the value of the Army to the Nation was as great in peace as in war and that national defense "must concern itself with civilian problems at home, quite as much as with armed forces in the field." Earlier in the address he stated that "it is a little appreciated fact that its (the Army's) constructive activities have saved more lives through its peacetime work and have created more wealth and well-being through its technical operations, than it has destroyed in its wars, hard-fought and victorious though they have been.

Emphasizes Leadership

"With us the Army does not stand for aggression, domination or fear," he said. "It has become a corps d'elite of highly trained men whose talent is great technical skill, whose training is highly co-operative, and whose capacity is used to defend the country with force when affairs require that force be used."

Placing emphasis on leadership, the President indicated that modern mechanization and motorization has served to intensify, rather than diminish, the necessity for high quality of individual leadership and places greater responsibility than ever before on leaders of small units.

Mr. Roosevelt described the just-concluded visit of King George VI "as a courteous recognition of the cordiality and good will which prevails between two great nations.

"Its significance lay in the fact that friendship could exist between two countries since both were without fear—without fear of any act of aggression of one against the other. To achieve that result, strength is needed; strength which comes, not from arms alone, but from restraint, understanding and co-operation which in turn are the product of trained and disciplined minds."

His concluding advice to the graduates was for "continuous study of problems outside as well as inside the military field, as the necessary preparation for the greatest success in your chosen work."

Stanley W. Dziuban, of Yonkers, N. Y., honor graduate of the class, was the first to step forward, walk up a narrow ramp in front of the speaker's rostrum, salute the President and receive from his hand a diploma and hearty handshake.

Only once did the long line of graduates stop, when, just as Cadet David Badger Goodwin reached the platform, the President paused to mop perspiration from his brow and a murmur of amused sympathy rose from the crowd.

Cheers and shouts rang from the corps as athletically prominent and popular cadets received their diplomas, particularly Cadet James Lewis Cantrell, the cadet first captain and regimental commander. But the corps rose to a man, threw caps in air and made the rafters ring when Cadet Arthur Tillman Williams 3d, last man in the class, received his diploma. According to tradition, the last man, or class goat, is the one who keeps the bottom from falling out of the class and is therefore honored.

Roosevelt Cheered

Benediction by the Rev. George C. Murdock officially closed the ceremony but Cheer Leader and Graduate F. G. Forrest leaped to the speaker's platform and called for a "long corps yell" for the President which was given with a roar. Two more yells were given, one for the class of 1939 and one for the corps, and the exercises were over.

Following the ceremony, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, accompanied by their official party and the honor guests, were taken to the quarters of Brig. Gen. Jay L. Benedict, superintendent of the academy, where he and Mrs. Benedict were hosts at luncheon.

Mrs. Roosevelt wore the gown she had chosen when she attended church with the King and Queen of Great Britain at Hyde Park Sunday. A thistle print of blue on a white background, made floor-length, she covered it with a floor-length redingote of royal blue taffeta. With it she wore a matching blue taffeta hat, made with a fairly high crown, medium brim and a self-trim. Her accessories were of white.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, the only one of the younger Roosevelts present, was gowned in a blue silk, white-dotted print with a matching light wool coat, edges of which were scalloped and piped in white. With it she wore a small white hat tilted over one eye and trimmed with a blue ribbon and veil and a pair of dark blue wedge heel shoes.

Among the honor guests at the ceremony and luncheon were the Ecuadorean Ambassador, Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro, and Senora de Alfaro. Ambassador Alfaro was here to see two of his sons, Jaime and Eloy, graduate from the academy.

Being Ecuadorean citizens, they will not receive commissions as officers in the United States Army.

Other honor guests included Rear Admiral Wilson Brown, superintendent of the United States Naval Academy, who arrived from Annapolis by seaplane just half an hour before the ceremony and was accorded an 11-gun official salute.

Gen. James G. Harbord and Mrs. Harbord were among the honor guests and those who filled the rostrum and superintendent's box included Maj. Gen. William N. Haskell and Mrs. Haskell, Mrs. Hugh A. Drum, wife of Maj. Gen. Drum; Maj. Gen. Dennis E. Nolan and Mrs. Nolan, Rear Admiral Ross T. McIntire, Stephen S. Early, George T. Summerlin, Brig. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, Capt. Dan Callaghan, Commissioner Flynn, Miss M. A. LeHand, Mrs. J. M. Helm, Col. and Mrs. C. L. Fenton; the commandant of cadets, Lieut. Col. C. W. Ryder and Mrs. Ryder; Lieut. Col. C. H. Danielson and Mrs. Danielson, Col. and Mrs. J. L. Devers and Capt. and Mrs. R. B. Hutchins.

While the Presidential party was lunching with Gen. and Mrs. Benedict, news reporters were luncheon guests of the academy press relations officers, Maj. R. E. Du Puy and Capt. Frederick A. March 3d, at the post officers' club.

At 1 p. m. (Eastern standard time) the Presidential party entrained from West Point for Washington.

[President Roosevelt reached the Capital at 7:10 p. m. He was motored to the White House immediately upon his arrival.—Editor's note.]

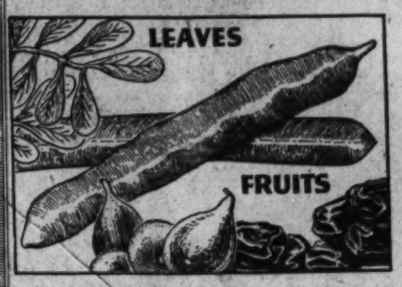
Jam? No, Tam

Corrects Constipation

WITHOUT ARTIFICIAL LAXATIVE DRUGS

Works like a charm



Some semi-tropical fruits and leaves are endowed with laxative properties by Mother Nature. Shown here are but four of the sun-ripened fruits and senna leaves which help to make Tam the ideal laxative elegamer. It tastes like jam.

This tasty laxative relieves constipation in an entirely pleasant way—with leaves and fruits from different parts of the world . . . made like a tasty jam.

When you realize that so many other laxatives today depend on phenolphthalein (a chemical) or on salts, oils, calomel or other similar drugs, you can see why we are enthusiastic about TAM, which is natural in origin and gentle in action.

When sick headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, heaviness, drowsiness conditions caused by constipation, TAM brings effective results. Not only does TAM help to clear out clogged-up wastes—it goes further—it helps to restore tone and rhythm to the bowels. Take TAM to right your wrong bowel condition—and start to feel good!

Court Judge For Summer Is Advocated

Criminal Bench Jurist for D. C. Urged by Civic Association

Investigation into the possibility of keeping one criminal court in session all through the summer was voted yesterday at the annual business meeting of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, held in the Willard Hotel.

Dr. James A. Nolan, managing director of the association, pointing out that serious crime in the District had decreased by 34 per cent from 1937 to 1938, declared that "one of the most important factors in this improvement has been the almost continual operation of three criminal courts.

"We feel further improvement could be expected if one judge sat on criminal cases straight through the summer," he said. "With 12 judges now on the District bench it should be feasible."

Increased public interest in crime conditions in the District, greater willingness to co-operate in police lineups and "a tendency toward more severe sentences for habitual criminals" were cited by Dr. Nolan as contributing to the decline in lawlessness here.

Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Post, was re-elected president of the association. Other officers for 1939-40, all now incumbent, are John A. Remon, first vice president; Ella C. Werner, second vice president, and Vincent Saccardi, treasurer. Newbold Noyes was named secretary, succeeding Lee D. Butler.

Frank Addison, Morris Cafritz, Waldron Faulkner and Mrs. Harvey Wiley were chosen for two-year terms on the board of directors. Directors already in office, elected to continue until 1941, are:

Edward Burling, jr., Beatrice Clephane, Curtis McCalip, Frank F. Nesbit, Robert Lee O'Brien, Mrs. Roger Robb, Vincent Saccardi, Odell S. Smith, Ella C. Werner and Minor Hudson.

Boston U. Honors French Ambassador

Count Rene Doynel de Saint-Quentin, the French Ambassador, was given an honorary degree of doctor of laws by Boston University at commencement exercises yesterday. Mary C. Duffey, 1915 First street northwest; Elmer LeRoy Kimmell, 200 Sixteenth street southeast, and Helen Louise Sparks, 319 Fourth street northeast, were among the graduating class

Capital News In Brief

Truck of Bricks Stolen

A truck loaded with bricks was stolen yesterday from Robert Jones, colored, of 1234 Sixth street northwest, by three white men and two colored men, who forced him from the vehicle at Fourth and E streets southwest.

Three colored men and two white men were arrested later as they came over highway bridge and were jailed in connection with the holdup. The truck was found intact, according to police, at South Capitol and T streets. Police said the men were members of a union which is on strike against the Arlington brickyard employing Jones.

Thief Returns Wallet

A thief with a "conscience" robbed Rollo P. Currie, an Agriculture Department employe, of his wallet containing $40 Friday but netted only $39.93 after returning the purse by parcel post yesterday.

Currie told police the wallet was taken as he watched the departure of the King and Queen at Union Station. Yesterday a brown paper package arrived at his home containing wallet with his credentials but minus the cash. Postage stamps cost the sender 7 cents.

Gets His Pants and $60

Joseph Zuchelli, 40, Alexandria avenue, Alexandria, awoke yesterday to find his trousers hanging on the window sill. He considered the fact amazing, since he had hung the pants on a chair next to his bed.

Then Zuchelli discovered something even more amazing—his wallet, still containing $60, lying on the ground under the window. Police surmised that the wallet had fallen out of the pocket when the thief pulled out the trousers.

The Bally Burglar!

A thief with apparent athletic tendencies stole an assortment of seven baseballs (indoor and outdoor types) from a 5-and-10 cent store he broke into at 1920 Fourteenth street northwest last night. He also cleaned $16 out of the cash register.

Husband a Victim

An intruder pilfering her husband's trousers pockets was the sight that greeted Mrs. Marie C. Labert, of 14 New York avenue northwest, when she awoke yesterday morning. She screamed, and the thief jumped through the window. He got no loot.

Dirt on Road Costs $10

Two men were arrested yesterday for "depositing gravel on a public highway." The men were drivers for a construction company. Police said that loosely packed dirt had slid off the trucks, littering the streets. The drivers elected to forfeit $10 collateral.

Bicycle Injures Girl, 7

Seven-year-old Betty Ann Waldow, of 528 Minnesota avenue northeast, suffered a fractured collar bone when knocked to the street in front of her home by a bicycle yesterday.

Four School Children to Get Life-Saving Medals Today

Veterans Post Awards Hero Medals to Three Boys and a Girl in Elementary Grades for Outstanding Acts of Bravery

That heroism doesn't run in seasoned men alone will be demonstrated here tomorrow when four school children receive medals for acts of bravery done in the last year.

The children are Harry Atkin, 11, of 825 Fourth street southwest; Kathleen Alice Day, 407 Thirty-fourth street northeast and James and Clyde Davis, 11 and 14 years old, respectively, of 607 South Carolina avenue southeast.

All were proved heroes to the Police and Firemen's Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, that each year makes awards to those children in elementary grades who perform outstanding acts.

Harry Atkin attends Greenleaf School and is a dark-eyed, slightly-built boy. He is a member of the schoolboy patrol. At the noon recess one day, Harry saw Edward Johnson Howard, then residing at 1127 Fourth street southwest, in the street in the path of a rapidly-moving truck.

Without thinking of himself, he rushed to the boy and dragged him to safety. The act occurred on M street southwest, and Harry yesterday recalled that a nearby policeman said: "You got him out just in time."

Kathleen Day was awakened by the odor of smoke in her home the night of January 31, 1939. Her parents were away from home and she was alone in the house with two small brothers.

Grabbing up blankets, she wrapped them about the boys and started them out of the house but the smaller broke away and darted back inside. She ran back, caught the child and took him to safety. Running with the children to the home of a neighbor, Kathleen turned in a fire alarm.

Both of the Davis boys risked their lives in an attempt to save their brother, Rayvoughn, aged 7. The three youngsters were passing near Benning Bridge last June 28 when Raywoughn slipped and fell in the water. Jimmy leaped in after him but the drowning boy got a strangle hold, threatening to carry Jimmy down, too. Clyde jumped in to help and managed to get Jimmy out. The youngest boy was drowned.

The awards were announced yesterday by R. W. Graves, a past commander of the V. F. W. post. The medals will be presented at schools the children attend.

Seven G. W. Professors Honored

Alumni Association Also Pays Tribute To Mrs. Evans, School Trustee

Seven retiring George Washington University professors, including Dr. Edward Francis, medical director of the United States Health Service, and Dr. Paul Bartsch, undersea explorer-biologist of the National Museum, were honored at the annual meeting of the General Alumni Association last night.

Singled out for the tribute along with the educators who became professors emeritus was Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., first woman to be given an honorary doctorate and first to be named to the university's board of trustees.

Mrs Evans Praised

Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of George Washington, said Mrs. Evans had been the "spearpoint in carrying the ideals of the university," which he described as an institution on "the last frontier of American education."

At the "crossroads of world thinking" due to its position in the Nation's Capital, George Washington will develop, not as a local or sectional university, but as "national or international" in type through its position in all "streams of world thinking," Marvin asserted.

Citations were read outlining the careers of Dr. Francis, noted for his identification of tularemia (rabbit fever) by voluntarily infecting himself with the microbe, and Dr. Bartsch, discoverer of hitherto unknown species of undersea molluscs and a new depth to the Atlantic Ocean.

Citations were also read honoring Dr. Francis Randall Hagner, oldest member of the medical faculty and a national authority on genito-urinary surgery; George Morton Churchill, professor of English history; Carl Reudiger, dean of the school of education; Cecil K. 80 St. John's Graduates Hear Dr. Fitzpatrick

Follow Principles of Church for Democracy, He Advises Class

Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick, provost of Columbus University, last night urged the graduating class of St. John's College High School to follow the principles and teachings of the Catholic Church in order to be "well qualified to discharge your duty to your country and your God."

He spoke at graduation exercises in Memorial Continental Hall, when 80 seniors received their diplomas from the Rev. Brother Dorotheus, F. S. C., former principal. Edgar Joseph Jenkins, winner of the Dr. Robert E. Moran Gold Medal for oratory, delivered the valedictory.

"In a world mad with lust for power, in which the very dignity of the human soul is being constantly assailed, you will be put to the test," warned Dr. Fitzpatrick. "But you have been trained in the doctrines of Christian principles and disciplined according to the Catholic Church, you have been taught the philosophy of Catholic democracy."

Urging the graduates to pursue their academic studies still further, Dr. Fitzpatrick declared that a college education was "a necessity for any individual who wants to advance. Twenty years ago a college education was a distinction," he declared, "but today it is almost a commonplace. Your future work, your future happiness will demand it."

Death Again Asked For McAfee in 2d Slaying Trial

The Government yesterday asked a second jury to send William McAfee, 63, colored janitor, to the electric chair from which the Court of Appeals once saved him, by reversing his death sentence.

McAfee confessed that August 22, 1937, he beat Mrs. Henrietta Barbara Anderson, Veterans' Bureau clerk and widowed mother of two children, to death with a furnace shaker. He made scandalous charges against his victim, which detectives said were disproved.

The Court of Appeals reversed the death sentence because all the justices except Justice Edgerton felt that the jury ought to have been instructed to ignore the confession if McAfee was forced to make it.

G. W. Legal Society Hears Douglas

High Court Justice Calls Law 'Great Social Tool,' Hits Old-Style Teaching

The law is "a great social tool, useful to society not as an end in itself, but as a means to an end," Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas told top-ranking George Washington Law School graduates, who were inducted last night into the Order of the Coif, honorary legal society.

Justice Douglas, who was made an honorary member of the order, criticized past teaching of the law "as if it were nothing but a beautiful tapestry," containing merely the aesthetic qualities of pattern and symmetry.

J. Earle Steinhaver, supervising inspector of the District's new automobile inspection station, is passing out inspectors' badges to Inspectors Hire, Carter and Klein

Washington's newest traffic safety program—the compulsory inspection of automobiles—will begin operating Thursday when Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and other city leaders officially open the recently-completed test stations.

Ceremonies launching the project will be held at 11 a. m. at the Traffic Department's No. 1 station, 1827 West Virginia avenue northeast. Both stations—the other at 615 Tenth street southwest—equipped to inspect 400 cars a day, will be thrown open to the public following the inaugural exercises.

From front wheels to tail light, autos will be tested at the rate of one every four minutes, according to J. Earl Steinhauer, supervising inspector. Each station will operate four lanes, one for trucks.

Cars approved on the first inspection will receive green windshield stickers, good for one year. Rejected cars will be marked with red stickers and the owners will be given 10 days in which to correct defects.

11,000 Attend Baseball Centennial Ceremony

Immortals Are Honored By Leagues

Wagners Defeat Collins' All-Star Team at Ceremony At Cooperstown

By the Associated Press.

Cooperstown, N. Y., June 12.—The first hundred years are always the hardest, and Old Man Baseball took off on his second century today after being hailed and feted at the biggest birthday party tossed him during his 100-year rule as the No. 1 figure in American sport.

There were parades, dedications, speakings, a Babe Ruth "comeback," clam bakes, ball games and what not for more than 11,000 people who poured into this pretty village where Abner Doubleday sat down on a hot day and invented the national pastime more than 100 years ago.

Commissioner K. M. Landis, high priest of baseball, was there to lead the cheering. He received plenty of lusty rooting assists from a score of men whose names are found in almost every baseball blue book ever published.

The Baseball Museum and Hall of Fame, with its relics of glorious bygone days, was dedicated; so was Doubleday Field, built on the actual spot where Doubleday's pioneers first trotted into action 100 years ago. Eleven living members of the Hall of Fame renewed feuds and friendships and baseball as it was displayed in 1839, in the 1850's and in 1939 was reeled off by teams of schoolboys, soldiers and picked major leaguers, wearing the uniforms of the periods they represented.

Men who have helped make baseball history—Babe Ruth, Connie Mack, Hans Wagner, old Nap La Joie and Walter Johnson, to name just a few—sat on the platform as Landis dedicated the Hall of Fame "to all America."

Immortals Present

It was accepted by Ford C. Frick and William C. Harridge, presidents of the National and American leagues; and William C. Bramham, president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs, representing the minors. John A. Heydler, former National League president, who conceived the idea of the baseball party, was a guest of honor and introduced Commissioner Landis.

Ten of the 11 living members of the Hall of Fame were presented with engraved bats, and a ruffle of drums and the sounding of taps answered the calling of the names of the 14 deceased members.

Ty Cobb, the old Georgia peach of the Detroit Tigers, was delayed en route by illness and didn't arrive until after the ceremonies. But the other ten were there from Connie Mack, the 76-year-old dean, down to Babe Ruth, the freshman of the lot.

In addition to Mack and Ruth were Honus Wagner, greatest shortstop of them all and still active as coach of the Pittsburgh Pirates; Tris Speaker, the old "Gray Eagle," of Cleveland; Walter Johnson, the "Big Train," of Washington; Nap Lajoie, a great Cleveland star of the old days; George Sisler, holder of the world's record for safe hits in a single season; Cy Young, who won 511 major league games; Grover Cleveland Alexander, the shutout artist of his day, and Eddie Collins, former great second sacker for the Athletics and Chicago White Sox.

Ruth, Johnson and Alexander got the largest ovations, but all were warmly received by the fans.

A sell-out crowd of more than 10,000 saw a team of National and American League players, selected by Hans Wagner via the "choose-up" method, defeat a team captained by Eddie Collins, general manager of the Boston Red Sox, 4 to 2, in seven innings.

The high spot of the afternoon was a "comeback" by Babe Ruth, who lumbered out as a pinch hitter for the Wagners. The Babe, far off his old-time form, popped weakly to Catcher Art Jorgens after missing one strike by a country mile and fouling off another.

Riggs Enters Quarterfinals In Paris Meet

Elwood Cooke Also Advances; Mrs. Sarah Fabyan Is Beaten

By the Associated Press.

Auteuil, France, June 12.—Bobby Riggs, who will have to shoulder the American amateur tennis burden that Don Budge dropped when he turned pro, advanced into the quarterfinal round of the French hard court tennis championships today.

The top-seeded Riggs eliminated Marcel Combemale of France, 6—8, 6—4, 6—4, 8—6 in his march toward the title that was won last year by Budge in his drive to a tennis grand slam—championships of France, England, Australia and America.

Also in the quarter final round, alongside Riggs, was Elwood Cooke of Portland, Ore., who advanced when Franco Kukuljevic of Yugoslavia had to quit because of a blistered hand. Cooke was leading 6—2, 2—1 at the time.

Riggs then teamed with Gracyn Wheeler of Santa Monica, Calif., in the mixed doubles to defeat Mlle. Paulette Mellerio and Roger Dessair of France, 6—4, 6—1.

Lone American casualty of the day came when Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan of Brookline, Mass., was eliminated in a quarterfinal match by Mme. M. Lebailly, unranked French player. The scores were 6—1, 6—1.

Don MacNeill of Oklahoma City, former junior titleholder, also advanced with a 6—2, 1—6, 6—3, 4—6, 6—2 triumph over Bernard Destremau of France.

Jockey Clark Is Traded Even For a 6-Year-Old

Collinsville, Ill., June 12 (AP).—Two owners made an even-up trade of a jockey for a horse at Fairmount Park on closing day.

Charles Kranz exchanged the contract of 18-year-old Charley Clark, apprentice jockey, for Tramway, 6-year-old race horse owned by Butsey Hernandez. This was believed the first time on record that such a trade was made.

Clark rode his first race two weeks ago at Fairmount and scored a victory with Rose K. He will be riding for Hernandez at Detroit later in the week. Tramway, winner of $4,205 in purse money last year, took one first, one second and three thirds in 18 starts this year.

Nelson Fires Eagle To Win National Open

1-Over-Par 70 Carries Texan to Victory Over Craig Wood in Second Play-Off; Loser Shoots 73; Nelson Has 4-Stroke Lead in 4th

By Bill Boni.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

Philadelphia, June 12.—Byron Nelson, as durable as a cow pony from his native Texas and as cool as a Tom Collins on a summer day, fired two great iron shots on the third and fourth holes of the Philadelphia Country Club's Spring Mill course today and thereby won the Forty-third National Open golf championship.

He had to go to the eighteenth green of his second playoff round with Craig Wood before he could make the victory official with a one-over-par 70 to Wood's 73. But the blond bomber from Mamaroneck, N. Y., was ready to admit their struggle for the game's most important title was over as early as the fourth hole.

On No. 3, Nelson used his sand wedge on a downhill lie and lofted a shot that almost rolled into the cup for an eagle 2. On the fourth, out-driven a good 40 yards and 200 yards short of the green, Byron laced into a No. 1 iron and saw his ball light onto the green, 15 feet short of the cup, roll up and nestle against the pin.

When he and Wood walked onto the green and the pin was lifted out, the ball plopped into the cup for a deuce, Nelson's second eagle of the tournament. Right there the 27-year-old pro from Reading, Pa., who shortly will take over a new job at Inverness in Toledo, had the playoff won. He was four shots in front, and that was too much for Wood ever to make up.

He Didn't Give Up

But Wood didn't stop trying. On the seventeenth which he had started four strokes down, he hit a fine approach shot within 2 feet of the pin and canned the putt for a birdie 3. Even that, though, left him three strokes down with only one to play. Nelson, down the long eighteenth, where Sam Snead had blown a championship which was his for the asking, was far too steady for any chance of a crackup.

For Wood, it meant he had lost probably his last, and best, shot at the title. It also meant that the bad luck which had pursued the 37-year-old veteran through four other playoffs still was hanging on. In 1931 he lost a playoff to the late Johnny Golden for the North-South championship at Pinehurst. In 1933, he was beaten by Denny Shute in a playoff for the British Open title; in 1934, Paul Runyan beat him out in the P. G. A. final in two extra holes. In 1935, after being tied by

Nelson's Open Title Quiets Golf Critics

By the Associated Press.

Fort Worth, Tex., June 12.—Perspiration dripped from Byron Nelson's brow that hot afternoon back in 1931 when he dejectedly walked off the eighteenth green, his square jaw sagging.

"It's too bad," mumbled old heads in the gallery. "He has the shots but will never be able to stand the pressure."

The championship match of the Glen Garden Country Club's annual invitational had been played. One finalist was Gus Moreland, of Dallas. The other was a square-shouldered blond boy who three-putted to muff victory and send the battle into extra holes.

That three-putt caused the gallery murmurs. When Moreland went on to win on the thirty-eighth green with a long putt for a birdie, the defeated lad was the saddest person in Texas. Tears were very close.

Byron was born in Ellis County, Texas, February 12, 1912. The family moved to Fort Worth ten years later and took a house hard by the Glen Garden course. It was inevitable the boy should become interested in golf.

He came rushing home one afternoon waving a dollar bill. It was the first money he derived from the game—caddying.

From that day, golf was his consuming interest. When he wasn't packing a bag, he was working in

Piedmont Leaguer Will Start Against Chisox Tomorrow

The Nats will present a new first baseman tomorrow when they open a long home stay with a series against the White Sox. Bob Prichard, called in from the Washington farm at Charlotte, will be issued a uniform and told that the first base job is his if he can hold it.

Manager Bucky Harris is impatient to learn what help he can expect from Prichard, who comes recommended to him as a steady fielder and a power hitter. Harris is no little intrigued by Prichard's .386 average for 33 games in the Piedmont League, and is particularly impressed by the fellow's record of runs bated in, which shows an average of one per game.

Owner Clark Griffith was at Cooperstown, N. Y., yesterday, participating in the centennial celebration of baseball when his worn and bedraggled Nats returned from their ill-starred Western trip. But with his return to the city today, he is expected to go into a long conference with Manager Harris.

If Harris is forced to explain the reason for the Nats' disastrous tour of the West, his answer will be very simple. In a word, it will be "errors." In nearly every conceivable fashion the Nats have been booting away ball games, with a sieve-like defense that has been the worst in Washington baseball history.

Baffling Harris, too, is the sudden collapse of the Venezuelan Alex Alexandra, who has been knocked out of the box in the first inning of his last two starts after pitching brilliant ball since the opening of the season. Despite Alex's recent failures, he is still regarded by Harris as a starting pitcher.

Coach Mulligan Resigns Hilltop Track Duties

After 8 Years, Leaves Georgetown to Devote Full Time to Business

Tall and taciturn, James V. Mulligan, coach of track at Georgetown University the past eight years, and for more than a quarter century a close student and outstanding official of the sport, has resigned his position to devote full time to business.

MULLIGAN

A capable track man in his student days at Georgetown, 1903 to 1906, and a successful coach first at Navy and then at Catholic University before succeeding John O'Reilly at the Hilltop, Mulligan said last night that he was indeed sorry that he must leave the game as an active figure.

"My associations with Georgetown were always pleasant," he said, "and had not it been absolutely necessary to resign I would not have done so."

After graduation from Georgetown in 1906 Mulligan rose quickly as an expert in the training and developing of track men and in 1915 was appointed coach at Catholic University. He remained there until March, 1917, when he accepted an offer from Navy. Leaving Navy after the season of 1918, Mulligan for a while dropped out of the picture, but returned to the Hilltop on several occasions to substitute for O'Reilly when he was ill, sometimes for protracted periods.

In 1931 Mulligan was made coach at Georgetown and has since enjoyed fine success, especially with one-mile relay teams. His most noteworthy achievements were with his mile relay quartet of 1937, which he built from only five candidates, all sophomores, into a team that smashed all existing records at

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The 1939 National Open will be remembered not as the triumph of Byron Nelson in a two-day play-off, but as the horrible debacle of Sammy Snead. Every future collapse on the brink of a national open victory will be likened to Snead's Waterloo on the seventy-first and seventy-second holes at the Philadelphia Country Club where, on two par four holes, he required a five and an horrendous eight and blew the title by three strokes.

POVICH

When Roland Hancock, a young Virginia pro with a chance to beat out Bobby Jones and other greats on the last two holes of the 1928 open, suffered an attack of jitters and scored a pair of sixes when a pair of fives would have netted him the title, it was a pardonable let-down. Hancock was an obscure interloper who didn't figure to win the title anyway. But Snead, here was one of the strong men of golf playing like the veriest duffer when he had only to keep his feet on the ground and play only half-bad golf.

But if it's any solace for Snead, he has plenty of company in a long list of figures who blew chances for brilliant triumphs. He has as a kindred figure, for example, no less than Jack Dempsey who, in the moment when he seemed to be the first heavyweight champion to regain his title, lost it again.

Dempsey Kissed Off Championship

That was, of course, the September night in Chicago in 1927, when Dempsey had Tunney on the floor in the seventh round. He had Champion Tunney at his mercy, panting and groveling from the flurry of blows to the head that, for a few brief seconds, knocked him insensible. And then Dempsey kissed off the championship by a weird bit of behavior when he refused to retire to a neutral corner as the pre-fight rules had stipulated and gave Tunney the long count that restored his faculties and fighting vigor.

Only two months before, Dempsey himself, was the beneficiary of the same kind of a brainstorm that affected Jack Sharkey. On that night in Yankee Stadium, with a Tunney fight and a $200,000 share of the gate beckoning, Sharkey blew his chances with one stupid maneuver and got himself knocked out and removed from the title picture.

Sharkey had only to stay on his feet to beat Dempsey that evening. For four rounds he was giving Dempsey the worst beating of that man's life, a worse licking than Tunney had handed out to the old mauler at Philadelphia when he lifted the title. At the end of the fourth round Dempsey in fact stumbled to three corners of the ring before he found his own. Sharkey was ahead on points from here to there and could hardly lose the fight. Then, in an attempt to win the easy way, he turned his head toward the referee to claim a foul. You know what happened. A Dempsey left hook landed on his chin and with a punch Sharkey never saw, he was knocked out.

Max Baer blew one just as horribly. Had he won his fight with Jimmy Braddock, he would, as champion, have drawn down 37½ per cent of a million dollar gate with the Joe Lewis fight that was shaping up for him. But what happened? Against Braddock, a wheezing old trial horse, Baer let his title slip without resistance. He simply didn't choose to fight that night, and never did he regain a place in the big money of the fight industry.

It Has Happened in Baseball, Too

It has happened in baseball, too. The St. Louis Browns of 1922 could beat out the Yankees for the pennant if they could win a three-game series from the lowly Washington club on their home grounds. But they blew two games to the Nats and lost the pennant by a game. Jack Chesbro would have pitched the Yankees to the 1906 pennant, but he threw away an important game with the Red Sox in the last week of the season with a wild pitch.

The worst collapse in all baseball may have been the Pirates' inability to hang onto a nine-game lead late last season in the National League, but it is pretty much rivaled by the Washington club's sour exhibition in the 1925 World Series.

The Nats, you may remember, had that series virtually won. They failed to put on the crusher in the fifth game. The Pirates won that one, and the sixth, too. But in the seventh game at Pittsburgh, the Nats gave Walter Johnson a 4-0 lead in the first inning. By any sort of reckoning, that was tantamount to victory for the club the great Johnson represented. But he lost that lead, and he lost another one in the eighth inning and the Nats blew the series.

It has happened in football, too. The Detroit Lions of last year had only to knock off the push-over Philadelphia Eagles to win their way into a play-off with the Packers for the Western title. They didn't beat the Eagles. Ohio State led Notre Dame, 13 to 0, with three minutes to play a few years ago, and Ohio State blew that one. Duke led Southern Cal., 3-0, with a half-minute to play last January in the Rose Bowl—and blew it. In a way, they were all Sammy Sneads, if that's any solace to him.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 12.—Ray Carlen, manager of Lou Nova, has decided to toss his fellow into the same ring with Joe Louis in September, instead of taking the advice of a thousand fair and foul weather friends who believe that if Lou waits a year he'll improve and Louis might overeat himself enough to make it a fairly even fight.

CONSIDINE

One of the most eivilized men ever to embrace the quaint profession of skull knocking, Carlen has issued a formal statement to the sports writers who have been enthusiastically doubting his managerial judgment since Nova's uprise began. He reveals that at the time he bought Nova's contract for $1,000—that was in January of 1936—he promised Lou that he'd get him a heavyweight championship fight within four years. He says the time has come to fulfill his promise, a decision that will be widely deplored by fight managers.

"I have been severely criticized for every recent match Nova has had," reads a line plucked by the roots from Carlen's somewhat novel statement. ". . . Nevertheless, Nova was the victor in every case. It is admitted that in some contests he showed lack of experience, but it is also acknowledged that he has improved from one contest to the other.

Stood Toe-to-Toe With Baer

"Before the Max Baer match I was warned that Baer was a desperate fighter. He had trained for the Nova match harder than any other; he was changed and would die fighting for victory. I was told what I already knew, that Baer was the most terrific puncher in the heavyweight division. Knowing all of these warnings to be true, our plan of strategy was for Lou to box and circle Baer until Max showed signs of tiring. But Nova displayed all disregard for such warnings, fought Baer at his own game, and won. This is further proof that Nova has the spirit that will not be downed. He is an inspired fighter, and for this reason it is my contention that his next match must be for the heavyweight championship.

"In an analysis of Nova's record, you will find that in 16 fights he won every amateur title that is possible for him to win. In 27 professional bouts he has eliminated all contenders. In comparison, I claim that the Nova of today is as good, if not better, than the Tunney who took the title from Jack Dempsey. And Tunney was given little or no chance by the boxing experts. In Gene Tunney's last fight, with Tom Heeney, he was claimed to be a finished fighter. He turned in a creditable performance, technically stopping Heeney in the eleventh round. I am sure that everyone will agree that Max Baer was a more dangerous opponent, and a better fighter, than Tom Heeney. Yet in stopping Baer in the eleventh round. Nova administered a worse beating to Max than Tunney did to Heeney."

Maybe Promoters Want It

This may just be a windy way of saying, "Well, we got this far, so we're going to grab off that dough now." Carlen's decision might have been forced on him by the boys of the 20th Century Sporting Club, who could very well use another Louis fight this year.

But, steeped in our iron naivete, we believe that this is Carlen's idea. And if it's Carlen's idea it must be a good one, for it was against the advice of some of the profoundest bores in the experting business that he shoved Nova in there against Barlund, Farr and Baer.

The only flaw I can see in his reasoning is that he presumptuously likens the Louis of today to the doddering Dempsey who got good and close to Tunney only once in 20 rounds of boxing. My own humble hunch is that the Dempsey of 1926 and 1927 wouldn't have lasted any longer against Louis than two rounds.

There might be one other flaw in Carlen's logic that this is the right year for a Lou-Joe fight. He says with some pride that Nova disregarded instructions to circle Baer and fought Max toe to toe. It made a name for Lou, but if he tries the same disobedience against Louis he'll make even more of a name for himself—for he will have the distinction of being knocked out quicker than any heavyweight challenger in history—with the exception, of course, of Tony Galento.

Spencer Sets Record to Win Sweepstakes

Pro-Am Play To Worsham And Bogart

Beaver Dam Pro Bags A 67 to Win Sweeps At East Potomac Over B and D Courses

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam pro, hung up his second course record of the year yesterday, finally solving East Potomac's toughened B and D courses with a great 67, five under par and six strokes under the previous record for the pro-amateur tournament. In doing so he won the sweepstakes.

Earlier Al Houghton, Georgetown Prep mentor, had cracked the mark by four shots with a 69 to take the lead in the pro sweepstakes with a score that was apparently tops for the day, but Spencer was out in 33 and back in 34 for his 67. In the second pro-am of the season, he smashed Mount Pleasant's record, also with a 67.

The pro-am play went to the long-hitting youngsters, Lewis Worsham, Chevy Chase assistant pro, and Ralph Bogart, Army and Navy Club champion, who were both around the par mark, individually, but played almost perfect partners for a best ball 65, seven under par.

Spencer and Charles Malone, Redskin grid ace, were second in the pro-am play with a 66, Malone helping on the fourth hole with a par when Spencer was over in two and missed a short putt for a par. Two other teams figured in the prize money, Houghton and Maury Fitzgerald, Kenwood, who helped Houghton with a pair of birdies on the back nine, and the Baltimore duo of Andy Gibson, Bonnie View pro, and Spencer Overton, Rolling Road amateur. Gibson was 72 and Overton aided five shots.

Houghton's 69 was good for second mopey on the $50 added pro sweepstakes purse, while three split third prize with 71's, Ralph Beach, Suburban; Leo Walper, who took 5 on the last hole trying too hard for a 3 to tie Houghton, and Al Jamison, Indian Spring mentor, who had a 5 on a par 3 hole, but otherwise accounted for 14 pars and 3 birdies.

The fourth hole cost Spencer his only stroke to par. He dropped 6 birdie putts, the longest from 30 feet and one 20-footer, and made several other putts from 5 to 10 feet. It was the finest round on a municipal layout here in several years. Wiffy Cox and Houghton held the previous mark for the course since Tommy Doerer made it several hundred yards longer last year, with 67.

The nationally known pros who Doerer believed would play in the tourney, including Ben Hogan, Jimmy Demaret, Tommy Armour, Toney Penna, and others, failed to put in an appearance.

Bogart, with six birdies, one by chipping from off the green, and two others by 12-foot putts, and Worsham, with six birdies, posted a fine 65, after going over par on the second hole.

Defending Champion Otto Greiner, of Rodgers Forge, and former titleholders Billy Shea, Congressional, and Harry Pitt, Manor, top a field of 74 in the thirty-fifth annual Middle Atlantic Amateur Championship, at Chevy Chase, starting tomorrow with a qualifying round.

A pro-amateur will precede the event today, with Host Professional Robert T. Barnett and 12 other mentors competing, each with an amateur entered in the tourney. The entrance fee is $5 per man, and no post entries will be accepted. Play begins at 2 p. m.

Greiner, Shea and other young stars, Buddy Sharkey, Ralph Bogart, Bobby Brownell comprise the main threat for the annual sectional tourney, but Roger Peacock and Volney Burnett are included in a big Indian Spring delegation that must be reckoned with for Friday's finals.

A big majority of the field, smaller than expected, is from the District, while Baltimore's main hopes lie in Greiner and Spencer Overton, while Charles Kent, J. S. Battle and John Dunlop are included in a small Virginia entry of little-known players.

Meade, Mulitz Make All-Star Lacrosse Team

Maryland Boys Named On All America; 2 Middies Honored

Navy and University of Maryland are each represented by two players on the 1939 All-American lacrosse team selected yesterday by the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association. Army, Pennsylvania, Yale, Johns Hopkins, Hobart and St. John's of Annapolis each placed one.

Jim Meade, second defense, and Milton Mulitz, point, are the Terrapin members of the mythical aggregation, while Nathaniel James, goal, and Charles Hendrix, outside home, are Navy's representatives.

In reviewing the selections, Dr. Lawrence D. Cox, of Syracuse University, who headed the All-American committee, said of Meade:

Supporting his choice of Mulitz, a former Tech High School athlete, Dr. Cox said:

"Tolson, of Johns Hopkins, although out for a considerable portion of the season because of illness, appeared definitely to be the best inside defense player, and Mulitz, of Maryland, a finely-coached, heady and resourceful player, probably was next in line."

Mrs. Opal Hill Wins Western Open Medal

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, June 12.—Medalist honors in the Women's Western Open championship went to Mrs. Opal Hill, Kansas City veteran, with an 84 today over the Westwood course, while all favorites, including Helen Dettweiler, a pro of three weeks from Washington, D. C., qualified for tomorrow's first match play round.

Mrs. Hill had 43, 41 for her winning score, played in a drenching rain, with miniature lakes forming on the greens. Two tied for second honors, a stroke back, Mrs. Helen Hicks Harb, Woodmere, N. Y., pro and Ella Mae Williams, Chicago, with 85.

Miss Dettweiler, one-time holder of the District, Maryland and Mid-Atlantic crowns, was grouped at 87 with Beatrice Barrett, defending champion from Minneapolis, and Alberta Neblett, Louisiana State champion from New Orleans. The District player had 43-44.

Other sub-90 scores included Jeanne Cline, Shirley Ann Johnson, and Goldie Bateson, 88; Mrs. Bert Weill, Virginia Pepp and Mrs. Charles Harting, 89.

Miss Dettweiler meets Mrs. M. B. Wallace, jr., of the host city, in the first round of play, while Mrs. Opal Hill plays Mrs. W. F. Anderson, also of St. Louis.

D. C. Women's Title At Stake Today

The first team championship of the Women's District Golf Association will be decided today, with Indian Spring's defending champions entering the final day's play two points behind Chevy Chase, and the two teams meeting by an art, or bit of luck in schedule making, over the Army and Navy course.

Indian Spring was a heavy favorite to repeat, but from the very first of the ten matches, when they defeated Columbia only 7-5, the Four Corners club octet has been pressed by Chevy Chase. Last week, with the teams tied up, Chevy Chase defeated Congressional by a nine-point margin, while Indian Spring's margin over Manor was seven points.

Captains Mrs. F. D. Letts, Chevy Chase, and Mrs. W. R. Stokes will each present their usual line-ups for the title match. Play starts at 9:25.

23,864 Watch Yanks In Kansas City Game

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, June 12.—The world champion New York Yankees defeated the little world champion Kansas City Blues today, 4 to 1, before 23,864 spectators.

Steve Sundra, one of the Yankees' unbeaten pitchers, held the Blues to six hits, one of them a fence-rattling triple by Clyde McCullough. The winners, their longest blow a three-bagger by Charles Keller, got nine hits off Joe Vance and Frank Makosky.

Lou Gehrig, ironman first baseman, returned to the Yankee line-up for the first time since May 2, when he benched himself and halted his marathon of playing in every game since 1925. Gehrig said he would leave the club here for a physical checkup at Rochester, Minn.

Winner's Late Drive Nets Victory; Roman Boy Grabs the Show; Double Pays $146.40

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 12.—Those who played the "King and Queen" hunch collected a bunch today as Royal Business won the Charleston Purse, doing her own version of the "Charleston" with four pounding hoofs in the stretch. To the fortunate who backed the daughter of Sun Meadow and Pretty Business went $9.20 for each $2 investment.

Today's feature over the "slightly more than" 6-furlong course went the way of so many others—to the colors of Capt. Ewart Johnston, of Virginia. With Jockey A. Vesseli doing a masterful saddle job, Royal Business got up in the concluding jumps to win by a neck margin from Celtic Legend, with Roman Boy third, another half length away. The race brought to an end the three-race winning streak of Roman Boy. The P. H. Faulconer colt had turned back all kinds of opposition at 4½ furlongs, but found the added distance not to his liking. In fact, he acted as if he did not wish to run before the starter sent the field away. Roman Boy huffed and puffed and tried to knock the assistant starters down before being placed outside the stalls for the start.

He did as expected, however, and went to the front at once. Celtic Legend and Strumming were closest to him. Until mid-backstretch Royal Business was not asked for speed. When Jockey Vesseli clucked to her Royal Business began banging, came through on the outside and, after Celtic Legend had taken a brief lead over Roman Boy, Royal Business put on the "royal drive," and it was enough for victory.

One of the best daily doubles of the meeting came on the combination of Gray Gleam in the second race and Beaufest in the third. The $6.40 and $27 shots brought a $146.40 pay-off.

Who Says the Camera Is Unimpeachable—Look at This

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

From the looks of things here, Bill Farnsworth (4), is the winner—at least, that's the way the camera angle showed it after the finish yesterday in the Oregon Handicap at Aqueduct. The horse actually finished third, while Fairflax (6) won, Porter (5) finished second, and Armor Bearer (nose, at left) finished fourth.

SILVERY WAY, first away, set a strong pace and staved off challenges to win under intermittent punishment. AUFOIN went close up and was held safe in the closing drive. HEART PLAY, well up for a quarter, dropped back and came with good energy in the stretch run. FLYING CHEROKEE was not prominent. GOLD D'OR was roughed in the early stages.

Calling all DeMolay baseball players—Manager Baldwin wants you to contact him tomorrow between 6 and 8 p. m. at Adams 4680.

Bill Bennings

At The Post

Charles Town, W. Va., June 12.

Dear Al: If you'r interested, here's the pay roll of the top Jockeys for last week: Palumbo, $327; Hacker, $245; M. Kirk, $244; Garrett, $220; Vesseli, $185; Root, $182; Nertney, $145; Shanks, $135. Out of this came the agent and valet fees, as well as riding equipment and incidentals. But it ain't hay. Joe Stevens' dish breakers and Bill Bennings' press box pests take the diamond in the infield at 10:30 tomorrow to battle it out. My players have been instructed to hit the ball and walk, not run, to the nearest base. George Russell, former minor league ball player, is an owner here. His Charming Mary pulled up lame in her last start. Jockey J. A. Taylor has the "fall off" chamionship of the meeting. He takes them in "Prince of Wales" fashion and comes up smiling. James Pal leaves tonight for Delaware Park. Owner-Trainer Al Parker will stay here with Flying Heart and Big Buddy. Parker couldn't get opposition for his horse here except in handicaps. Charlie Miles will take the horse at the other town. Apprentice Bernie Everson is coming over here to ride toward the end of the week. Jockey Leon Garrett got a hand when he shook off a bruised leg and rode Sir Warning after the gelding jammed him in the starting gate in the second race. Chief Evergreen, Lacey Miss, Calamega, Camola, Irish Vote, Night Watch, Clever Girl, Kindle, Wintona and Stars Above are all members of the stewards' list. This means they are unfit for race at this writing. The late Senator Milton O. Rouss, of Jefferson County, who was responsible for racing in this State with parimutuel wagering, will be honored Saturday when the Rouse Memorial Handicap, a mile and one-sixteenth affair, is carded by Race Secretary Burton. J. E. Hughes, of Washington, has turned Expelled and Lady Poctor over to Claude Feltner to train. BILL.

First Race—Pompey's Rose has been getting education and appears in the spot for a crack-down in this field. Jockey Johnson will do the riding and he's better than a green haid. Long Pass has worked well and may be in the thick of contention. Kinmag and Wagold are possibilities.

Second Race — Rocky Mount turned in an impressive winning effort here last week and is likely to come right back in this company. Travelo was a winner earlier in the meeting and is dangerous. Dolled Up gets in this with feather weight and could be close.

Third Race—Green Water, second on the reserve list, should do a lot of running in this company if sent postward. Kirk is slated to ride. Hurdy Gurdy has been knocking around and may be prominent. Canteret is running herself into shape.

Fourth Race—Flagabout set a track record from an outside post position and gets that for this heat. Looks like the right one. Red Wing is fit and ready and deserves some attention. Lyde appeared much the best in somewhat similar company last week.

Fifth Race—Raceaway is dropping down and seems to have found the right spot. The short sprint route suits and I see no reason

Home Loans In 4 Months 1.087 Billion

Savings Groups Account For 30 Per Cent and Banks 25 Per Cent

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Home mortgages amounting to 396,158 and valued at $1,087,822,000 were recorded in American cities and towns during the first four months of 1939, the Division of Research and Statistics of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board reports, savings, building and loan associations accounting for 30 per cent of the dollar volume. Banks and trust companies were second with 25 per cent and individuals third with 19 per cent. Insurance companies had about 9 per cent of the recordings, mutual savings banks approximately 3 per cent, and the group of miscellaneous other mortgagees, nearly 14 per cent.

A gain of about 3 per cent from March to April was registered by savings and loan associations and the same amount for mutual savings banks. Banks and trust companies dropped about 8 per cent from March to April. The totals for the first four months by type of lender, number and amount were: Savings and loan associations, 129,124, $322,148,000; insurance companies, 19,341, $97,137,000; banks and trust companies, 85,673, $273,780,000; mutual savings banks, 10,075, $34,486,000; individuals, 105,047, $204,263,000; others, 46,898, $156,008,000.

Increase Over April

Savings and loan associations also showed a substantial increase in April commitments for mortgage loans. They made new home mortgage loans valued at $83,425,000, an increase of 13.7 per cent over March and a rise of 13.8 per cent over April, 1938. In the first four months, such new mortgage loans totaled $270,679,000, 13.9 per cent over the aggregate of $237,720,000 in the same period of 1938.

The district served by the Federal Home Loan Bank of Cincinnati (Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee), led all other areas in the country in new loans during the first four months, $44,001,000. The Winston-Salem area of Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida was second with $36,844,000, and the district of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Chicago (Illinois and Wisconsin) ranked third with $25,903,000.

Auto Sales Jump.

Sales of new passenger motor cars soared in the Fifth or local Federal Reserve District in April, amounting to 20,188 cars, an increase of 13 per cent over 17,800 cars sold in March, 1939, and 43 per cent over 14,092 cars in April, 1938. The increase in sales in the Carolinas over 1938 sales reflects steady employment in textile industries and payments by the Government to farmers under various crop-control plans. Registration figures for new cars were furnished by R. L. Polk & Co., of Detroit.

Automobile sales in the District of Columbia in April totaled 2,807 against 1,936 last year, showing an increase of 45 per cent. During the first four months of the current year, sales in Washington totaled 8,988, compared with 5,921 in the like period in 1938, an increase of 52 per cent. The report states that sales in Maryland in April totaled 3,735, a gain of 39 per cent over April, 1938, while the four months' auto sales totaled 13,164, up 51 per cent.

Woman Expert Sure Wheat Crop Will Be Smaller

Chicago, June 12 (AP).—A woman who refuses to change her mind had the grain trade in a dither today. Mrs. Eileen Hennington Miller, the country's only prominent feminine grain expert, will not exercise a lady's prerogative—at least not yet.

Instead, she sticks to her own slightly pessimistic ideas about this season's wheat harvest, other crop authorities and the Department of Agriculture notwithstanding. It had male members of the grain trade—essentially a masculine business—a little befuddled.

Mrs. Miller, diminutive, curly-headed mother of a six-year-old son, figuratively stamped a tiny foot and shouted "no!" to fellow crop experts here and in Washington who would not be as pessimistic as she about probable winter wheat production this season. And that "no" carried weight because of her long experience in judging crops before harvesters go to work.

About 10 days ago, Mrs. Miller, whose business requires her to go into the fields throughout the U. S. grain and cotton belts in forecasting prospective production, predicted that the winter wheat harvest would total 492,000,000 bushels compared with 687,000,000 produced last season. A few days later five other Chicago crop experts—all men—came out with estimates ranging from 515,000,000 to 536,000,000.

This week Mrs. Miller began her third tour of the belt and reported she was not inclined to raise her estimate to any appreciable extent although conceding that recent rains might improve conditions in some areas. "Wheat is shot in some places," she asserted. She wired her office here from Kansas today that there was very little wheat left for harvest in some localities.

Treasury Exchanges $415,619,500 Notes

Holders of $415,619,500 out of the $426,554,600 of the 1⅜ per cent Treasury notes maturing September 15 accepted the Treasury's offer of new five-year, three-quarters of 1 per cent notes in lieu of cash payment.

The September notes were refunded last week, officials said, to take advantage of favorable market opportunities and to clear the way for borrowing of "new money" to finance Government operations in September, if necessary.

Shell Oil Plans $82,427,000 Issue

New York, June 12 (AP).—Shell Union Oil Corporation was reported in financial quarters today to be negotiating with Morgan Stanley & Co., toward the refunding of the former's funded debt totaling $82,427,000.

Present plans, described as "only tentative," call for a new issue of 20-year bonds bearing an interest rate of 2¾ per cent. The issue would replace $57,427,000 of 3½ per cent debentures due in 1951 and $25,000,000 of 3¾ per cent debentures due in 1953.

Higher Crop Forecasts Hit Wheat Prices

Selling Wave in Last Hour Cuts Values More Than a Cent

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 12.—Wheat values fell more than a cent a bushel today to the lowest level in about three weeks in a final-hour wave of liquidation blamed largely on favorable crop reports from the Northwest and greatly increased movement of new wheat in the Southwest.

After holding steady most of the session, scoring a small ¼-cent gain at times, the market slumped rather sharply at the last and closed at the day's lows. July contracts fell from 74⅞ to 73⅛.

The close found prices 1⅛-1⅜ lower than Saturday, July 73¼-⅛, September 73⅞-¾. Other grains broke with wheat, corn closing ¾-1⅛ lower, July 49⅛-49, September 50⅞-¾; oats ⅜-⅝ down; rye ¾-1 lower; lard 7 to 8 down.

As selling of wheat on orders from both winter and spring wheat belts increased, with hedging presumably a factor, stop loss liquidation was touched off, accelerating the decline. Reports of stem rust in sections of Kansas, with one crop expert expressing belief that some damage cannot be avoided, and of red rust in central Illinois tended to restrict selling for a time. However, from the spring wheat belt came State statisticians' comments that rains since June 1 have greatly improved crop prospects.

Stocks Work Lower, But Volume Shrinks; Rail and Steel Shares Decline Most; 50-Cent Stock Leads Day's Activity

New York, June 12.—For the purpose of the record, there was an average decline of 0.34 point in the stock market today, but this did not perturb the bullish forces to any great extent. For there was a falling off in activity on the decline and to those who are long of stocks and would like, very much, to sell them at higher levels, a decline in activity accompanying a decline in prices is bullish—much like a corporation reporting only half as much deficit as it did the year before.

Only 424,200 shares changed hands on the big board today. Fractional prices changes predominated, as has been the case for some weeks now, and in the weakness that developed the leaders were rails, steels, metals and aviations. The other groups didn't do quite as poorly. As an example of what we have come to, the day's most active stock was a 50-center, namely Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron, which reminds us of the days of the old Curb Exchange, which years ago flourished in the open on Broad street before the present Curb organization got civilized and moved indoors.

Hot Dogs

Always willing to grab at a straw, the speculative fraternity grabbed at the big board's hit dog stock today and traded in Gobel diligently enough to get this little-known issue into the list of the 15 most active stocks. In fact this particular dog, that is stock, was the seventh on the list. It closed up an eighth point, which wasn't bad on a percentage basis, for it means that the combination of Roosevelts, royalty and a picnic had provided sufficient advertising for the lowly frankfurter to jump a stock 3 to 4 per cent. That is more than the party of the first part has done for anything in Wall street since the days of Camco.

This boom of an eighth in Gobel will have to serve as the feature of today's stock market, for there doesn't appear to have been any other. Writing anent the stock market and consumers goods—whether frankfurters or other allied lines—one of the street's ablest commentators remarks that while the New Dealers plan to encourage spending and boom consuming lines, they still neglect the greatest single influence to spending—the stock market.

"He adds: "Any small merchant—even in rural communities—who studies the fluctuations of his business will find that a rising active stock market is accompanied by increasing demand for his goods. This is an example of what has caused the failure of even good legislation under the New Deal to stimulate real recovery. It reflects the ignoring or ignorance of the fact that like capital and labor, big business and small business—heavy goods and consumer lines stand or fall together."

News Not Cheering

The day's statistical information was not favorable. The chief item was the drop of 1.1 points in steel operations for this week to 53.1 per cent of capacity. Few of the active stocks got as much as a point away from their former closing levels. Exceptions on the downside were Chrysler, off 1¼; Safeway Stores, off 2; Johns Manville, off 3½, and Westinghouse, off 1½. Steel and Bethlehem also were down 1⅛ each. Columbia Gas was a firm spot in the utilities.

Among the commodities wheat was off 1⅛ to 1⅜ cents a bushel on favorable crop reports and the movement of new grain. Cotton declined 9 to 12 points on increased liquidation because of the delay in the House on the export subsidy plan.

Bond Market Narrow

Listed bonds drifted slowly lower in an idle market today, with a few small gains scattered among the minus signs. Most United States Treasury issues were lower, and high grade corporate issues finally gave a little ground. In the speculative sections the downward trend of equities was emulated, with issues here and there escaping the mild pressure. Foreign dollar obligations likewise were irregularly lower. Turnover was only $5,010,000.

The fresh downturn in Treasury bonds lowered indicative issues 2-32 to 12-32 point, but the group held above the low figures of last Friday. A little demand was noted for relative short dated obligations. The guaranteed bonds of the farm and home corporations were quiet and uncertain, with most institutions holding aloof in the belief that new Treasury financing will be done via that route. Telephone bonds dipped fractionally, and the well-rated utility issues followed a similar trend. Leading rails and industrials held their ground.

Rail Issues Lower

Medium-priced railroad bonds reflected the speculative interest always present in such securities since 1929. Losses ranging from fractions to 2 points appeared in the higher priced bonds of the group, while others also were lower. Borderline and default rails were dull. Holding company bonds were little changed, while industrial convertibles receded with their related equities. The local traction department dropped moderately, as did other special groups.

Chilean municipal bonds improved in the foreign section, owing to arrangements for servicing some of the securities. Other Latin-American default bonds receded. German, Greek and similar European default bonds attracted a little buying. Italian 7s improved fractionally, while Japanese bonds were soft. Highest grade foreign dollar bonds were idle.

New York News Bureau To Suspend June 30

New York, June 12 (AP).—The New York News Bureau Association, operator of financial news tickers in the New York metropolitan area, announced today it would suspend operations June 30 because of "continued and increasing depressed conditions obtaining in the financial district."

The announcement, printed on its tickers, said the "high cost of gathering and distributing news and the lessened demand for its service" made it impossible for the bureau "to maintain its present high standards of service at prevailing rates." Between 40 and 50 employes, it was said, are affected. Melvin J. Woodworth is president.

Sunray Oil Calls 5% Debentures

New York, June 12 (AP).—Sunray Oil Corporation today called its outstanding 5 per cent convertible debenture shares for redemption July 31 at $26.25 a share plus interest to the call date.

The redemption was made possible by a loan of $3,00,000 from a group of banks in Tulsa, Oklahoma City, Chicago and New York. The loan is repayable $50,000 monthly with interest at 3½ per cent over five years.

Finished Steel Shipments Increase

New York, June 12 (AP).—Shipments of finished products of the United States Steel Corporation in May totaled 723,165 tons, an increase of 21,706 tons over 701,459 tons in April. In May, 1938, shipments amounted to 465,081 tons.

For the five months to the end of May shipments aggregated 3,659,833 tons, an increase of 1,127,536 tons over 2,532,297 tons in the comparable period a year ago.

Steel Operations Dip to 53.1 Per Cent

New York, June 12 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week will decline 1.1 points to 53.1 per cent of capacity, compared with 54.2 per cent last week, the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today.

A month ago output was at the rate of 45.4 per cent of capacity and a year ago 27.1 per cent.

Steel Industry 5-Year Budget Twice Earnings

Billion Spent on Plant While Net From 1934 to 1938 Was 409 Million

Cleveland, June 12.—One billion dollars is the expenditure of the steel industry over the past five-year period, for modernization, including plant expansion, new plant construction and equipment, according to a survey made public today by the magazine Steel. Net earnings of the industry from 1934 to 1938 amounted to only $409,000,000.

Although 1938 was one of the industry's poorest years, and so far 1939 earnings are relatively low, there has been considerable volume of building. At the first of this year 13 mills were under construction for five companies, while plans for new work have since been announced by several more units. Total bill for the year on projects already announced is estimated at $126,000,000.

Technology

An outstanding reason for improvement of production facilities is the fact that technological changes and industrial requirements for finished products are changing so rapidly that the industry as it existed but a few years ago could not have supplied the demand. For example, all-steel tops on automobiles are the direct result of wide strip rolling—a technological advance of the steel industry.

Considerable of the money spent for new equipment and modernization has gone into better research facilities. Within the past year, despite the recession, two major steel companies have completed extensive new research facilities, and a third has an elaborate program under way. Such laboratories are constantly bringing refinements and improvements in existing products, as well as developing new products to fit customers' needs.

Cotton Futures Off 45 Cents to 60 Cents a Bale

New York, June 12 (AP).—Cotton futures swung into lower price territory today. In an orderly retreat, closing prices showed losses of 9 to 12 points. Speculation over the fate of an export subsidy plan for the staple dominated the market. Brokers here and abroad appeared convinced there was little chance for enactment of such a plan. The pattern of legislative thinking, cotton men said, seemed toward parity payments to keep cotton out of the loan next season.

The incentive to sellers was action of the House-Senate Appropriation Committee in turning the agricultural appropriation bill over to the House for final action, expected in the next day or two. Foreign selling came from Liverpool and Bombay while local pressure represented Southern and professional liquidation. Buyers were extremely cautious.

Lazzeri Named Manager of Toronto

Tony Takes Over Club On June 19

Deposed Pilot to Stay On as First Baseman; Maple Leafs Mired In League Cellar

By the Associated Press.

Toronto, June 12.—Tony Lazzeri, former major league second baseman, has been signed to succeed Jack Burns as manager of the Toronto Maple Leafs, of the International League, President Don Ross announced today.

Ross said Lazzeri signed the papers last night after a conference with club officials and Burns, who will remain with the Leafs as their regular first baseman. Burns took over the managerial job from Dan Howley last season.

Burns will remain in charge of the team until June 19 when it returns from a road trip. In the meantime Lazzeri, who spent 12 seasons with the Yankees, will discuss plans with Toronto officials here. Ross said Howley will remain as general manager, in charge of the team's affairs off the field.

A change in Leaf management has been rumored for the past week as the Leafs failed to make any headway for their fight to get out of the cellar. They have been bogged down in last place since the season opened, at present being 18½ games from the top with 16 wins and 34 losses.

Lazzeri was signed as a playing manager and likely will play second or third for the Leafs. He was released last week by New York York Giants who signed him after Brooklyn Dodgers cut him adrift. Lazzeri was with Chicago Cubs last season, his first away from the Yankees, and batted .266 for the season.

Nelson Captures National Open

Gene Sarazen's double eagle, he lost out in a playoff for the Augusta Masters.

For Nelson, this was the biggest of four major tournament victories. Byron, rated one of the greatest iron players in the game, especially into the face of such a brisk wind as whipped over this course today, won the Metropolitan in 1936, the Augusta Masters the following years, and the North-South Open at Pinehurst this spring.

Best Scoring Record

His 70 today gave him the best scoring record in 14 playoffs for the Open championship. The wiry youngster, a member of last year's United States Ryder Cup team, shot a one under par 68 in his final round of the regulation 72 holes of the tournament Saturday to tie at 284 with Wood and Shute. He matched Wood's 68 with his second straight as both tied in the first 18-hole playoff yesterday and eliminated Shute, who shot a 76, and then followed up with a one over par performance when the pressure was hardest.

In Nelson's opinion, the turning point came at the fourteenth hole, a 394-yarder where a blind drive has to clear a fairway bunker 200 yards out from the tee. Both men cleared this hazard, with Wood, as usual, 20 yards out in front. But Nelson stuck his second into the trap.

That worried Nelson. "I was only three shots in front to there, and figured I was leaving the door open for Craig," he said later.

But Wood shut the door in his own face by following Nelson into the same sand pit, and then turned the key. Their balls were so close that, on his third Wood had to take his stance with Nelson's ball between his feet. The big blond hoisted it out of the trap, 10 feet past the pin. Nelson exploded his out almost the same distance away.

Nelson Goes 4 Up

Nelson knew how much hung on that putt. There was no hesitation as he studied the line and stepped up to stroke the ball. He eased it in. Wood barely missed his and Nelson was four shots in front again with only three holes to go. Byron dropped one of those to Craig's fine birdie on No. 17, but that wasn't enough, and on the home green Nelson almost ran his margin back to four shots when he bounced a 12-footer out of the back of the cup.

Nelson's and Wood's rounds for the 108 holes they played:

Nelson's Victory Answers Critics

Professional Dick Grout's golf shop. Moving from one task to another, he would take time out to swing his club or putt on a nearby green.

Later, Byron worked in a railroad office here but took time, after hours, to practice his shots in the growing dusk.

In 1932, Nelson went to Texarkana and asked his friend, J. K. Wadley, for a job in the oil fields. After a round of golf with the youngster, Wadley vetoed that move.

"You're a golfer, son," he said. "You love it too much. You stay right here and we'll work that game out."

Nelson stayed, becoming professional of the Texarkana Country Club. Later he went out on the winter circuit. He was offered jobs in the East and accepted.

Nelson's mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Nelson, still live in Handley, a Fort Worth suburb. His father owns a feedstore there. He has a brother, 13, and a sister.

"We always knew he could do it," Byron's father said today. "We nearly wore our radio out Sunday listening. It sure was tough when he took that bogey on 17 but that putt on 18 had us jumping around chairs. Naturally, we're about as happy as can be right now."

Nationals Sign Sandlot Hurler In Annapolis

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, June 12.—Young Dave Hollidayoke apparently was headed for the big leagues today, and that noise of brass bands, exploding cannon, thunder and tom-toms was from over on the sandlots where they knew him when.

Hollidayoke, who'll turn 20 July 19, signed an agreement with Joe Cambria, scout for the Washington Nationals, and will report to the team for a look-see Thursday. He will be farmed out for seasoning, but, if you can believe Cambria, "this kid will be in the big time before you know it."

Mulligan Quits As Track Coach

Madison Square Garden while defeating the I. C. 4-A champions.

Each of the following years saw Mulligan develop a promising freshman; first Reaves and then Mort Alnwick, and so for last season he had expected from a quartet of Reeves, Alnwick, George Bogan and Jim McPoland the greatest mile relay squad he had ever coached.

But his dreams of a super team were not realized, for McPoland and Reeves left college, and Bogan decided to remain out of competition for a year to give his full attention to the study of dentistry at the Hilltop. Yet even with three of the four boys he had counted upon missing, Mulligan whipped together a better-than-average team which won all but two indoor starts, and those losses were suffered with a substitute runner in the line-up.

During the indoor season Mulligan's unusually small squad of six varsity and six freshmen won 60 medals and several trophies.

On Fishing

We have had our fishing notes called predictions several times during the past few days, and we are hastening to correct the idea, for even with past performance to base their movements and inclinations upon, the scaled beauties have crossed us up so many times during the 30-odd years we have been following them, that, no matter how well they were striking today or yesterday, what they are going to do tomorrow is the rankest kind of a guess.

ACKERMAN

To know that certain species are in some particular waters is all that an angler can hope for. Whether or not they will be caught depends on the weather, the individual ability of the fisherman, and luck.

A good example of this was brought to our attention just this week-end. Friday evening two boats came in to Deale from the Gooses, one with three small hardheads, the other with possibly a dozen. Yet on the following evening Johnnie Manifold had two of his boats return from fishing the same place with more than a thousand between them. It wasn't the weather, for according to the barometer and wind direction, both evenings were almost identical. So it must have been either luck or ability.

Fish on Grounds

So when we say the Gooses, or Solomons, or any place is good we mean the fish are on these grounds or have been during the past several days. News gleaned from fishing guides, commercial men and sportsmen, when added up, gives a fairly accurate picture of what we want to know—and to make a guess that under normal conditions fishing in the areas in mind will be good.

Each year the largest individual fish of the four species, the catching of any one of which is what it takes to get your name on the roll of the Fly Fishermen Club, is awarded a prize by Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, president of Eastern Air Lines.

For the year 1938-1939 Paul Sanborn, of Boston, leads in the blue marlin class with a fish weighing 596 pounds and measuring 12 feet 6 inches. In the bone-fish class, Evans Tucker's 10-pound 12-ounce fish was tops, while T. R. Mullen, of Brooklyn, took the largest tarpon noted this year, 142 pounds, to place first with the giant silversides caught in such great numbers on the west coast of Florida at this time of the year. Although any number of larger sailfish were caught, than the 85-pounder taken by J. French Robinson, of Pittsburgh, at Salerno, his meeting the other requirements of the club, fly to or from the fishing grounds, was what gave him first place in the sailfish class.

Carolina Trout Fishing

We have been noting from time to time news of trout fishing in western North Carolina for two reasons. First, because the season extends through the hot months of the summer when the streams of all other nearby States are closed, and second, because it is almost virgin country.

To bring more forcibly to the attention of any anglers thinking of fishing this country, we note the experience of W. W. Claywell, who wandered off from his companions in the Daniel Boone Game Refuge and lost his way when dark came. He used his last match to light a fire to keep at a distance a gregarious Pisgah forest wildcat that, with peering, curious eyes, kept him company until dawn, when he faded away, while Claywell walked the wilderness aisles in search of a road. He found it after seven hours and was soon back to his camp with the aid of a passing car.

He remarked later that the exhausting experience was only part of the game, and in this case well worthwhile, for he had found the best trout pool in the Appalachians.

Redskins Sign Moore, Former Gopher Star

Wilbur Moore, 6-foot, 195-pound University of Minnesota halfback, has been signed by the Washington Redskins for the 1939 season, Owner George Marshall announced last night.

The ninth draftee on the Redskin's list, Moore, a left-right half, is the first player signed by the Skins from the "Big Ten" university.

Moore, who paradoxically gained 496 yards on 89 running plays from his right halfback position last year, is described by Marshall's staff as a virtual "whirling dervish" runner and a blocker with few equals. He is expected to take over the heavy blocking duties of right half with the Skins, but will carry the ball often, it was said.

The Redskins now have 20 players under contract for the coming season. Moore, who hails from Austin, Minn., will be graduated this week. He will join the Skins in their Spokane, Wash., training quarters in August.

4-Minute Mile NoPipe-Dream, Says Britisher

Sydney Wooderson Is Confident of New All-Time Record

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 12.—Sydney Wooderson, the littlest big league trackman in the business, said "Howdy" to the Statue of Liberty today and told the boys he figures the 4-minute mile is no longer a pipe-dream.

He wasn't cocky about it. There's nothing at all cocky about this slim, slight solicitor as he peers at you through spectacles. He looks for all the world like a high-schooler and you'd imagine him to be most anything but the world mile record-holder.

But both 24-year-old Syndey and his trainer, Al Hill, are quietly confident that Wooderson will knock off all this country's best Saturday in Princeton's invitation meet, and that he is likely as not to eclipse his own world record of 4:06.4.

Sees New Record

"If the track is as fast as I've been told," Sydney said, "we'll come in under the record, definitely. A 4:03 mile is possible. I'd like somebody to set a pace of 60 for the first quarter, and 61 for each of the next three."

"Would you be able to go out by yourself in that last quarter in 61 if you hit the three-quarters in 3:02?" he was asked.

"Well, I'd hang on as long as I could," he smiled.

"Right now," he added, "I feel I'm better than for any time in the last five years. I had two workouts daily on board. My ankle is well again and gives me no trouble. I'm leaving for Princeton at once and will work out daily, beginning today."

That ankle—his left—bothered him in the last Olympics. Afterward he discovered a bone was splintered. An operation has fixed it up.

Cunningham Decides To Race Wooderson

Princeton, N. J., June 12 (AP).—Glenn Cunningham, Kansan miler, telephoned tonight that he would race against Sydney Wooderson, of Great Britain, in the Princeton invitation track meet Saturday.

R. Kenneth Fairman, graduate manager of Princeton athletics, announced Cunningham's acceptance of his invitation a few hours after Wooderson, holder of the world's outdoor mile mark, arrived from his native country and tried out the fast Palmer Stadium track.

Woodruff to Run In Princeton Meet

Pittsburgh, June 12 (AP).—Johnny Woodruff, flashy track start with the University of Pittsburgh, tonight changed his mind a second time within a few hours, and announced he will compete next Saturday in the Princeton invitation track meet.

Some time ago Woodruff decided to pass up the N. C. A. A. championships in Los Angeles, also listed for Saturday, in order to remain here Wednesday and receive his degree.

O'Donnell's Grill Beats Heurich, 4-2

O'Donnell's Sea Grill defeated Heurich, first half winner of the Industrial Baseball League, 4 to 2, yesterday in the opening game of the second half.

Johnny Bettencourt held the losers to three hits while Simonds, newly acquired third baseman, drove in the winning runs in the eighth inning with a long double over Pepco Barry Barry's head.

Seven Up and Russell Motor play their first game of the second half race today, meeting on the Ellipse.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The bridge plebiscite, conducted by Hubert Phillips in "The News-Chronicle," of London, is still the subject of public interest. Phillips conceived the novel scheme of publishing a set of bridge hands and instead of giving the usual answers by experts, asked the bridge players to send in their versions of the correct bidding. The bids were then rated according to the number of times they were suggested by the bridge players rather than how they were ranked by experts.

To add to the fun, Phillips also put down his ideas of what should be done with the hands. Here are three of the problems:

Rebid Brings Many Replies

The score is love all. North deals. The bidding is:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What should South now bid holding:

♠ Q 5
♡ A J 10 9 8 7
◇ A Q
♣ A 10 6

"This produced thirteen different answers," says Phillips. "I had expected a wide range of suggestions, but not quite so many as this!" he adds.

1. 2 NT.	8. 2 ♣
2. 3 ♡	9. 3 ◇
3. 3 NT.	10. 2 ◇
4. 1 NT.	11. 3 ♣
5. 2 ♡	12. Pass
6. 4 ♡	13. 3 ♠
7. 5 ♡

"My own preference," says Phillips, "is for three hearts. It is rather surprising that not a single competitor suggested four no trump.

Take Your Pick

North South game; East West love. North deals. The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ◇	3 ♡	4 ◇
4 ♡	5 ◇	5 ♡	?

♠ K J 10
♡ None
◇ A Q 7 4
♣ K J 9 7 4 3

"This, of all problems, elicited the greatest unanimity of opinions as to what the best bid is. There were, nevertheless, seven different answers:

1. 6 ◇	5. 7 NT.
2. Pass	6. 5 NT.
3. Double	7. 5 ◇
4. 6 ♣

"South must have a whale of a heart hand and is probably void of diamonds. Five hearts may well be "on." I think, therefore, that West should bid six clubs."

Not in the Law Books

East - West game; North - South love. South deals. The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT.	Double	Pass	?

What should East bid, holding:

♠ Q 10 8 7
♡ Q 9 8 5
◇ K 10
♣ Q 10 5

1. 2 ♠	5. 3 NT.
2. Pass	6. 1 ♠
3. 2 NT.	7. 2 ♣
4. 2 ♡	8. 3 ♠

"Fifty competitors, incredible as it seems, suggested that East should redouble. I think the right answer is pass. If, as is quite likely, South has an escape suit, a fit can be found by East-West in one of the majors."

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

THAT new baseball stamp—that stamp collectors have been licking their chops over—has about emptied the Postoffice Department of its officialdom. The exodus to Cooperstown, N. Y., where the first issue is being sold, was led by Mr. Farley hinself.

And Mr. Farley will get the first sheet of the baseball stamp that's sold. But he—big-hearted—won't keep it. He will present it to baseball's czar, Kennesaw Mountain Landis.

PROFESSIONAL training for "under-Cabinet" posts has been explored by Professor Arthur W. McMahon and Instructor John D. Millett, of the Columbia University department of government for their book "Federal Administrators," from which this interesting excerpt is taken:

"Law furnishes more undersecretaries and assistant secretaries than any profession. Lawyers comprise 5 out of 10 undersecretaries of State, and five out of seven undersecretaries of the Treasury. All 11 first assitant secretaries and 18 of 21 assistant secretaries of the Interior, and 6 of 12 assistant secretaries of Commerce were drawn from the legal profession. For the departments, generally, businessmen and journalists have usually run a close race for second place, but far behind the total number of lawyers.

"Appointees to the positions of undersecretary and assistant secretary in the various departments are shown to have come mostly from Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana and Michigan. Oregon and Nevada, at the beginning of 1939, had never been honored with the appointment of a native son to one of these positions. The assistant secretaries of the Interior have come primarily from the Middle West and Far West, while the Middle West has furnished most of the assistant secretaries of Agriculture."

ALL of which, somehow, brings to mind the fact that while the law as a profession brings so many persons to top-ranking Federal jobs, very much depends on where the individual received his training in the law. If he was trained under the elms and beside the ivy of Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Virginia, or any of the schools of high repute, his chances are tenfold. But, on the other hand, if he learned his law (as Lincoln did) by the midnight oil and by intense application in whatever school suited his convenience and pocketbook—his chances are more like one in a thousand of getting a Federal legal job.

The Agriculture Department leads the list of those wanting only such lawyers as can produce a diploma from what it regards as a "recognized" college. The attitude is wide-spread. Where the applicant came from and where he got his schooling, is the first question asked.

Something is being said about it in Congress, but how far it will get is something else again. Senator Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, has a measure to relieve the situation by prohibiting any discrimination against applicants for legal jobs, provided, of course, that they have passed bar examinations. His measure is supported by the smaller law colleges in Washington, and is backed by the American Federation of Government Employes. This organization believes that the doors to legal jobs should be kept wide open to Federal employes who, in their spare time, and through study at night, have equipped themselves for the jobs.

The question has not been one that produced large fireworks or outward noise. But there has been an intense dissatisfaction, under the surface, on the part of those who went out at night and studied law and then passed the examinations—to have jobs denied them because they couldn't produce diplomas from "recognized" colleges. They have been watching the progress of the Sheppard measure with interest, as have the faculties of the smaller colleges here. These groups say they have never asked anything more than that all applicants be made to stand on their own footing, instead of on the name of a college at the top of a diploma.

Bob Burns Says—

Everybody has got his own personal system of doin' things and, as a rule, everybody you meet thinks his system is better than anybody else's. I know a man who plays the horse-races, and for the past 40 years he's used one single system which he figgered out. He knows if he sticks to it, he's bound to win a race someday!

Everybody in the family was glad to hear that Uncle Hod's boy, Dub, had finally got a job which he could hold. After bein' fired off about 14 jobs in two years, he got a job with a cotton broker. A year later, Hod went to the manager and said, "Mr. Caleb, I wan'ta thank you for givin' Dub a raise. That must prove he's worth somethin'!"

The manager said, "Yep. Dub is invaluable to me. Before I put out an order, I let Dub read it. If he can figure out what it means, nobody ain't gonna misunderstand it."

CHAPTER VII.

Penny Baxter and Jody, his 12-year-old son, have taken Julia and Rip, the dogs, and are hunting for Old Slewfoot, the bear, who has come out of winter quarters and killed the Baxters' brood sow. The scene of this fine characterization of the Yearling is all in northern Florida on an upper reach of the St. Johns River. Jody has always lived there, alone with his parents except for the creatures of the wild in the woods and scrub. But Jody knows them all for Penny has taught him their ways.

"I feared it," Penny said. "The bay——"

The red bay thicket seemed impenetrable. This land of sudden changes gave good cover for the game. Old Slewfoot in his careless feeding had never been far from shelter. The bay saplings stood as close together as the palings of a stockade. Jody wondered how the bear had managed to work his bulk among them. But here and there the saplings thinned, or were young and limber, and he could see, plainly marked, a common trail. Other creatures had used it. Tracks crossed and criss-crossed. Wildcat had followed deer, lynx had followed wildcat, and all about were the paw-prints of the small things, 'coons and rabbits and 'possums and skunks, feeding cautiously aside from their predatory kin.

Penny said, "I reckon I best load."

He clucked to Julia to wait for him. She lay down knowingly to rest and Rip and Perk dropped willingly beside her. Jody had been carrying the powder horn over his shoulder. Penny opened it and shook a measure of powder down the muzzle. From his shot-bag he pulled a wisp of dried black Spanish moss, inserted it for wadding, and packed it with the ramrod. He dropped in a measure of low-mould shot, more wadding, and at the last, a cap, and used the ramrod lightly again.

"All right, Julia. Git him."

THE MORNING'S TRAILING had been a leisurely business; a pleasant jaunting rather than a hunt. Now the dark bay thicket closed in over their heads, jorees flew from the denseness with an alarming whir of wings, the earth was soft and black, and there were scurryings and rustlings on either side in the bushes. On the trail, a bar of sunlight lay occasionally where the thicket parted. The scent, for all the comings and goings, was not confused, for the taint of bear hung heavy in the leafy tunnel. The short fur of the bulldog stood on end. Old Julia ran swiftly. Penny and Jody were forced to stoop to follow. Penny swung the muzzle-loader in his right hand, its barrel tipped at an angle, so that if he stumbled and the charge went off, he would not touch the running dogs before him. A branch crashed behind and Jody clutched at his father's shirt. A squirrel ran chatteringly away.

The thicket thinned. The ground dropped lower and became a swamp. The sunlight came through in patches as big as a basket. There were giant ferns here, taller than their heads. One lay crushed where the bear had moved across it. Its spiced sweetness lay heavy on the warm air. A young tendril sprang back into an upright position. Penny pointed to it. Slewfoot, Jody understood, had passed not many minutes before. Old Julia was feverish. The trail was food and drink. Her nose skimmed the damp ground. A scrub jay flew ahead, warning the game, and crying "Plick-up-wha-a-a."

The swamp dipped to a running branch no broader than a fence post. The print of the nubbed foot spanned it. A water moccasin lifted a curious head, then spun downstream in smooth brown spirals. Across the branch, palmettos grew. The great track continued across the swamp. Jody noticed that the back of his father's shirt was wet. He touched his own sleeve. It was dripping. Suddenly Julia bayed and Penny began to run.

"The Creek!" he shouted. "He's tryin' to make the Creek!'

SOUND FILLED THE SWAMP. Saplings crashed. The bear was a black hurricane, mowing down obstructions. The dogs barked and bayed. The roaring in Jody's ears was his heart pounding. A bamboo vine tripped him and he sprawled and was on his feet again. Penny's short legs churned in front of him like paddles. Slewfoot would make Juniper Creek before the dogs could halt him at bay.

A clear space opened at the creek's bank. Jody saw a vast black shapeless form break through. Penny halted and lifted his gun. On the instant, a small brown missile hurled itself at the shaggy head. Old Julia had caught up with her enemy. She leaped and retreated, and in the moment of retreat, was at him again. Rip darted in beside her, Slewfoot wheeled and slashed at him. Julia flashed at his flank. Penny held his fire. He could not shoot for the dogs.

Old Slewfoot was suddenly, deceptively, indifferent. He seemed to stand baffled, slow and uncertain, weaving back and forth. He whined, like a child whimpering. The dogs backed off an instant. The moment was perfect for a shot and Penny swung his gun to his shoulder, drew a bead on the left cheek, and pulled the trigger. A harmless pop sounded. He cocked the hammer again and pulled the trigger once more. The sweat stood out on his forehead. Again the hammer clicked futilely. Then a black storm broke. It roared in on the dogs with incredible swiftness. White tusks and curved claws were streaks of lightning across it. It snarled and whirled and gnashed its teeth and slashed in every direction. The dogs were as quick. Julia made swift sorties from the rear, and when Slewfoot wheeled to rake at her, Rip leaped for the hairy throat.

Jody was in a paralysis of horror. He saw that his father had cocked the hammer again and stood half-crouching, licking his lips, fingering the trigger. Old Julia bored in at the bear's right flank. He wheeled, not on her, but on the bulldog at his left. He caught him sideways and sent him sprawling into the bushes. Again Penny pulled the trigger. The explosion that followed had a sizzling sound, and Penny fell backward. The gun had back-fired.

RIP RETURNED TO HIS attempts for the bear's throat and Julia took up her worrying from the rear. The bear stood again at bay, weaving. Jody ran to his father. Penny was already on his feet. The right side of his face was black with powder. Slewfoot shook free of Rip, whirled to Julia and caught her to his chest with his cupped claws. She yelped sharply. Rip hurled himself at the back and buried his teeth in the hide.

Jody screamed, "He's killing Julia!"

Penny ran desperately into the heart of the fracas. He jammed the gun-barrel in the bear's ribs. Even in her pain, Julia had taken a grip on the black throat above her. Slewfoot snarled and turned suddenly and plunged down the bank of the creek and into the deep water. Both dogs kept their hold. Slewfoot swam madly. Only Julia's head showed above water, below the bear's snout. Rip rode the broad back with bravado. Slewfoot made the far bank and scrambled up its side. Julia loosed her hold and dropped limply on the earth. The bear plunged toward the dense thicket. For a moment more Rip stayed with him. Then, confused, he too dropped away and turned back uncertainly to the creek. He snuffed at Julia and sat down on his haunches and howled across the water. There was a crashing in the distant undergrowth, then silence.

Penny called, "Here, Rip! Here, Julia!"

Rip wagged his stumpy tail and did not stir. Penny lifted his hunting horn to his lips and blew caressingly. Jody saw Julia lift her head, then fall back again.

Penny said, "I got to go fetch her."

He slipped off his shoes and slid down the bank into the water. He struck out strongly. A few yards from shore the current laid hold of him as though he were a log and shot him down-stream at a fierce clip. He struggled against it, fighting for distance. Jody saw him stagger to his feet far down the run, wipe the water from his eyes and push his way back up the shore to his dogs. He leaned to examine the hound, then gathered her under one arm. This time he went some distance up-stream before taking to the creek. When he dropped into the water, stroking with his free arm, the current picked him up and deposited him almost at Jody's feet. Rip paddled behind him, landed and shook himself. Penny laid the old hound down gently.

"She's bad hurt," he said.

HE TOOK OFF HIS SHIRT and trussed the dog in it. He tied the sleeves together to make a sling and hoisted it on his back.

"This settles it," he said. "I got to git me a new gun."

"What's wrong, Pa?"

"Near about ever'thing. The hammer's loose on the cylinder. I knowed that. I been havin' to cock it two-three times right along. But when it back-fired, that belongs to mean the mainspring's got weak. Well, le's git goin'. You tote the blasted ol' gun."

The procession started homeward through the swamp. Penny cut north and west.

"Now I'll not rest 'til I git that bear," he said. "Jest give me a new gun—and time."

"I want to go ahead, Pa."

"All right. Go ahead. Jody—take the knapsack. Git you some bread. Eat a bite, boy. You'll feel better."

Jody fumbled blindly in the sack and pulled out the parcel of pancakes. The brierberry jelly was tart and cool on his tongue. He was ashamed to have it taste so good. He bolted several of the cakes. He handed some to his father.

"Don't bother him," Penny said. "I suspected him all along. There's dogs is bear-dogs and there's dogs jest isn't bear-dogs."

THE FEICE DROPPED IN at the end of the line. Jody tried to break trail, but fallen trees lay, thicker than his body, and would not be stirred. Bull-briers, tougher than his father's muscles, snared him, and he could only push his way around them or crawl beneath. Penny with his burden had to shift for himself. The swamp was close and humid. Rip was panting. The pancakes lay soothingly in Jody's belly. He reached in the knapsack for the sweet potato pone. His father refused his share and Jody divided it with Rip. The little feice, he thought, deserved nothing.

To Be Continued.
